GREAT MILK WAR ENDED; PEACE TERMS KEPT SECRET

Agreement Reached at Conference Only Awaits Ratification by Producers, Who Have Waged Fight for Winter Price

President Abbott of Producers Says He Hopes to Flash Good News to Farmers by June 1 That New Contracts Are Ready

THE milk war between the producers and contractors has been settled. A private temporary agreement was arrived at in a conference held in Boston yesterday.

Neither party to the conference would give the slightest indication as to the terms of settlement. It was stated, however, that the temporary agreement was satisfactory to the representatives of the farmers and the contractors who arranged it.

Nothing remains to finally end the war and bring about the resumption of milk shipments to Boston but the ratification by the producers. This will be considered at a final conference which is to be held on Wednesday. In the meantime the terms are to be kept a close secret.

Plans to Flash News.

It was significantly said by President Stanley H. Abbott of the Boston Co-Operative Milk Producers Association last night that June 1 (next Wednesday) would be a good date in which to resume shipments and make new contracts.

It was also significant in the statement that he gave out last night that President Abbott continually referred to the milk war in the past tense. He said:

"I hope to flash the news to the farmers next Wednesday night that the new contracts are ready and that the milk strike is over"

There were several conferences between President Abbott, Secretary Walter A. Hunter of the Boston Co-Operative Milk Producers Association and several of the contractors yesterday and when they were over President Abbott made his statement:

President Abbott's Statement.

"While we do not wish to raise false hopes in the hearts of the farmers, it seems to-night to the officers of the union that there is a strong possibility of a settlement of the strike before Wednesday.

"What the terms will be by which the farmers will agree to again ship their milk to Boston I do not know.

"It has been a great fight—this struggle of the past few weeks. I think that both sides have suffered.

"But June 1 is a good date on which to start a new deal, and I now sincerely hope that it may be accomplished. The contractors have met us in conference, and on Tuesday the final conference will be held. We will know at that time just what will happen on the next day.

"I have hope that on that night I can 'flash' the news to the farmers that the new contracts are ready and that the milk strike is a thing of the past."

"A Good Fight," Says Hunter.

Walter A. Hunter, secretary of the union, said:

"It has been a good fight. Both sides have stuck by their convictions. But I have felt that it might have been possible to end this war before if it had not been for the legislative investigation. The investigation no doubt helped our cause. Certainly the report of the committee gave the people assurance that our stand in the matter was justified. But everyone interested in the strike has said, 'Wait till we hear what the investigation brings out before we start to settle this matter.' Now that the report has come out our preliminary steps for bringing the strike to a close seems to have met with success.

"We first step looking to the end of the strike came Friday. All day yesterday we have been kept busy. I think now that a mutual agreement will be effected by which the farmers will be pleased and which will be highly satisfactory to the contractors. Just now I do not see any reason why the negotiations now pending should be broken off before an agreement is reached."

With the shipments held back this week, the New England farmers who stood by their unions have, in the past three weeks, held back about 3,500,000 quarts of milk from the Boston market. The consumer has had no difficulty in obtaining milk, although it has been openly charged that the

Kaiser Bitten By Insect, Unable to Sign State Papers

Eruption on Hand Treated by Physicians, who Guard Against Blood Poison.

BERLIN, May 28.—Emperor William is experiencing some inconvenience because of an eruption on the right hand caused by the bite of an insect. The court physicians state that there is no danger of serious consequences from the irritation, which they expect will disappear within a few days. They have, however, opened and treated the affected part against the possible development of poisoning. For the time being the Kaiser has delegated the signature of State documents to Crown Prince Frederick William and all urgent decrees will appear with the double signatures of the crown prince and the Imperial Chancellor, Dr. Von Bethmann-Hollweg, preceded by the notation: "By order of the emperor." This is the first occasion during the reign of the emperor upon which documents of State have received other than his autograph.

COREY TO BE DROPPED.

Slated to Go in Big Shift of Steel Trust.

NEW YORK, May 28.—Verification was obtained to-night of the announced changes that were impending in the United States steel corporation. The Carnegie faction is to go. W. E. Corey and Charles W. Schwab have ceased to be militant powers in this great organization and will drop our along with others.

"Mr. Corey likes Paris, and so does his wife," said one of the steel president's friends to-day. "He comes down once in a while to the offices but he is prepared to eliminate office hours from his daily habits."

No necessity is apparent for waiting until the next annual meeting. The annual meeting was last month and the changes in officers may take place any time between now and the next annual meeting.

RUSH WAR PLANS.

Peru-Ecuador Arbitration Effort Evidently Has Failed.

WASHINGTON, May 28.—Advices to the State Department to-day from Ecuador and Peru tell of the warlike preparations that are going on in both countries and indicate that the offer of mediation made by the United States, Brazil and Argentine has been a failure. The United States, Brazil and Argentine, it is said, will notify Ecuador and Peru that the mediation offer was made with the understanding that war preparations cease. Both countries have accepted the offer of mediation, but neither is living up to the terms of the agreement.

"I'VE COME HOME TO DIE."

Joseph Chamberlain Very Infirm on Return From France.

LONDON, May 28.—"I have come home to die," said ex-Premier Joseph Chamberlain, when he reached London this afternoon after weeks spent for his health in Southern France. He looked aged and more infirm than when he left. Mrs. Chamberlain, who was formerly Miss Mary Endicott of Salem, assisted him from the train and he was half carried to his carriage.

DEAN SMITH RESIGNS.

Head of Yale Medical School Quits After 25 Years.

NEW HAVEN, May 28.—Professor Herbert E. Smith, for twenty-five years dean of the Yale Medical School, resigned today. He is only fifty-three years old, but has decided to devote his time to his specialty, expert chemistry. He will spend next year in Europe and will return to the Medical School as professor of chemistry. His successor will probably be Dr. George Blumer, professor of theory and practice of medicine.

Census Figures by June.

By the first of June the cities will be told their population, according to the U. S. Census of 1910. The work of enumeration is practically complete for most of the big cities, and it will be demonstrated soon whether Chicago is as big as she thinks she is or whether Boston has made any phenomenal strides.

ROOSEVELT ASKS FOR CONFERENCE WITH INSURGENTS

Writes Congressman Fish, Requesting Private Meeting With Him on Arrival.

HIS VIEWS ARE UNCHANGED

Republican Rebels Confident of ex-President's Aid in War Against Commonism.

WASHINGTON, May 28.—Colonel Theodore Roosevelt has written to Representative Hamilton Fish of New York, a prominent insurgent, saying that his views of American politics have not changed since he quit the Presidential office, and asking Mr. Fish to meet him in a private conference immediately after his return to the United States.

The letter is in reply to a ten-page typewritten letter sent Colonel Roosevelt by Congressman Fish, explaining in detail all that had been done by the insurgents and why it had been done. There is no censure of the insurgents.

"You know my policies when I left the United States and while I was President," writes Colonel Roosevelt in effect. "I have not changed. I desire a conference with you immediately upon my return to the United States."

The letter was dated "Beckenser House, Leeds, England."

Fills Insurgents With Glee.

Absolutely no doubt exists as to the authenticity of the letter. No one in Washington, moreover, attempts to underestimate its significance. It is the first distinct word on politics that has been received from the former President, and there is a smugness about it that fills the insurgents with glee.

From this time on Roosevelt politics will begin to boil. The insurgents will take renewed hope, and if this conference with Representative Fish takes place in New York and after that the former President attends the Collier dinner, to which a number of other prominent insurgents have been invited, it is predicted here that the Republican party will enter the Fall campaign absolutely without hope.

More than that, while there was no reference to President Taft in Mr. Fish's letter to Roosevelt, if the latter attends the Collier dinner, then, after having been active in the Pinchot side in the Ballinger affair, it will be hard to convince anyone that Mr. Roosevelt has not joined the Pinchot-Garfield combination against the administration.

No Criticism of Taft

Colonel Roosevelt makes no comment in his letter on the Taft policies. It is left to the judgment of the recipient of the letter whether President Taft has been or is carrying out the Roosevelt policies. In connection with the Roosevelt letter there has swung suddenly a desire among insurgents to await the return of Colonel Roosevelt before proceeding to further measures against Speaker Cannon. It is possible therefore that no action looking to the unseating of the Speaker will come before the opening of the session in December. The Insurgents want the advice of Colonel Roosevelt, who is no friend of Cannon. They want also to hold Cannon as no asset in their fights at home.

With Cannon as Speaker they can make their fights before their constituents, basing their failure to vote to remove Cannon on fear of defeating the Taft legislation which they are supporting.

Leaders in both the House and Senate, who learned of the Roosevelt letter, did not attempt to conceal their chagrin, although they expressed doubt as to whether it could be construed as an announcement that Mr. Roosevelt had reached a definite conclusion as to what his course will be after his return to the United States.

It is admitted on all sides that the future of the insurgents, so far as the Congressional elections are concerned, depends largely upon the attitude of Colonel Roosevelt.

RECORD RACE TO SICK BED.

Chalmerses of Chicago Come from Carlsbad in 184 Hours.

CHICAGO, May 28.—Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Chalmers reached the bedside of their daughter, Mrs. Norman Williams, Jr., today after having made the trip from Carlsbad, Germany, in the record time of 184 hours. The daughter's recovery is predicted.

2 DEAD, 21 INJURED IN A WRECK ON THE LEHIGH VALLEY

Two Crowded Passenger Trains Leave Track and Roll Down Embankment.

DEFECTIVE RAIL IS BLAMED.

Accident Occurs on Small Horse Shoe Bend Near City of Wilkesbarre.

WILKESBARRE, May 29.—Details of a disastrous wreck in which two persons were killed and twenty injured, four probably fatally, on the Bowman's Creek branch of the Lehigh Valley Railroad, about twenty-three miles from this city have been received here. The despatches say that two passenger cars on a three-car local train were derailed and tossed down an embankment. The dead are:

Pley, Jacob E., Courtdale, Pa
Pollock, John, Beth Run, Pa.

According to the best information, the train was making about twenty-five miles an hour around the small horseshoe bend in an unpopulated section of the country when the accident happened.

The locomotive and baggage car passed a defective rail without trouble but the front trucks of the first passenger car left the rails and before any one had an opportunity to jump to safety was half over the edge of the embankment. Above the screams of those inside of the first car was heard the crushing of timber and glass and the snapping of the iron couplings.

WOMEN MOB MRS. TAFT.

Caught in Department Store and Made to Sign Post Cards.

PITTSBURG, May 28.—Mrs. Taft has arrived here for a two days' stay with her sister, widow of the steel millionaire, T. K. Laughlin. She will start for Cincinnati to-morrow morning. It was not generally known that the President's wife was in the city until this afternoon when she visited two downtown stores with Mrs. Laughlin.

It became whispered about one store that Mrs. Taft was shopping there, and 200 women nearly mobbed her, insisting that she autograph post cards that they had purchased hurriedly at an adjacent counter. Mrs. Taft autographed a few cards, but the crush was too much for her and she hurried out to the auto.

$1,800 JOB FOR CURLEY.

Councilman's Brother Goes to Collector's Office.

Mayor Fitzgerald yesterday approved the appointment of John Curley, a brother of Councilman James M. Curley, as a deputy collector at $1,800 per year.

In announcing the appointment the Mayor said that it was made at the request of Collector Brown. The new appointee has been engaged in the publishing business, and during the first Fitzgerald administration served as legislative agent.

He fills the vacancy in the department made by the transfer of George Pierce, a clerk at $1,200, to the Soldiers' Relief Department. There is also another vacancy at $1,000 per year, caused by the death of one of the other employees of the department, but the Mayor said that the two positions had been combined in the Curley appointment.

EDISON HAS A NEW ONE,

Will Soon Present Moving Pictures in Colors.

NEW YORK, May 28.—From Thomas B. Edison's laboratory comes the report that recent experiments indicate that he can make a machine that will produce moving pictures in colors. Red is the one color that Mr. Edison thus far has been unable to produce, but he expects with further experiment to overcome the difficulties.

HITS CAMBRIDGE AUTO.

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., May 28.—The big touring car of David Lonergan of Cambridge, Mass was wrecked here to-day on Congress street. The driver escaped injuries owing to the fact that he was making repairs at the time when a big auto delivery of the grocery firm of Cutter & Bonfield crashed into the Lonergan machine. The running gear was stripped and much of the wood work was damaged.

WHEAT DOWN 4 CENTS.

CHICAGO, May 28.—On an inert market wheat for May declined an additional four cents to-day, selling half an hour before the close at 98⅝ cents as compared with 102¾ at the close yesterday. Only a few small sales were made.

MARGUERITE TAYLOR'S OWN STORY OF HER LIFE AND LOVE FOR COLEMAN

MRS. MARGUERITE L. TAYLOR.
LOUISE TAYLOR.

MRS. TAYLOR TELLS OF LOVE FOR COLEMAN

"George W. Coleman and I were children together, were engaged to be married when we were fourteen years of age, and again after I had married, suffered and divorced a husband, renewing our old-time friendships about two years and a half ago.

"I have no absolute surety now that he does not love me still, but the time for love making is passed in his case and mine. The poor boy has been sentenced for a long term and I have only just fairly made up my mind that I have got to suffer the burden resting upon me.
—Mrs. Marguerite Taylor.

THE love story of Marguerite L. Taylor and George W. Coleman begun when they made sheeps' eyes at each other in the grammar school and lasting up to this time, when the cloud of a fifteen years' sentence to prison falls upon him, has been related by Mrs. Taylor for the readers of the Boston Sunday American. It is full of lights and shadows, laughter and tears.

Absolutely free from comment on the trial of William J. (Big Bill) Kelliher, now in progress before Judge Hale, in which he is charged with aiding Coleman to break the Cambridge National City Bank, Mrs. Taylor's story relates how she believed that Coleman received a weekly salary of $35 and from that gave her the attention that he did. Unreservedly she tells of her breaking with the convicted young man because of rumors that she had heard about his attentions to other girls, then how the news of his dishonesty at the bank came and pierced her heart like a knife. It was all planned, she says, that she and Coleman would marry. Here is her story just as she related it herself:

By MARGUERITE L. TAYLOR.

MY recent experience as a witness was one of the most trying of my life.

I testified because I was summonsed to do so, and I hope it is over.

But I shall remain near Boston for a few days yet and will attend court, if requested; not, however, of my own volition.

My acquaintanceship and affection for George W. Coleman, whom I have known since childhood and to whom I have been engaged to be married almost as long, makes me dread the court.

George Coleman is a good boy, in spite of what he has done. There is no criminal intent in his nature, whatever acts may be charged against him. Knowing him since childhood, and loving him much of the time as he loved me, I feel very badly about his predicament. Also, I harbor no ill will toward anybody connected with him, nor even against those who come between George Coleman and myself. We would eventually have married under normal circumstances. It is better, perhaps, for us both that we did not. But it has been a terrible blow to me as well as to others.

The Boston American has asked me to relate something of my life, so far as it has been linked with that of George Coleman, and I see no reason that I should not do so, leaving out references to the case on trial.

I am not sure but I will feel benefited for doing so for almost every woman likes to unburden her mind occasionally and this has been the greatest crisis

CHIEF FARO SWINDLER IN GRIP OF LAW

Strausneider, Held in $25,000 in Coleman Case, Said to Be the Leader of Gang That Has Fleeced Dupes of Millions

Prisoner Has Done Time, Picture Is in Rogues' Gallery and He Is Well Known on Race Tracks, Even in New England

Strausneider Is Said to Have Ruined Banker Walker of New Britain and to Have Paid the Bank $500,000 to Avoid Jail

THE kingpin of the big New York faro gang that has fleeced business men out of many thousands and probably millions of dollars, has been captured, the Federal authorities believe, in the arrest of James Strausneider, who was held yesterday in $25,000 bail in Brooklyn, charged with aiding and abetting George W. Coleman in the looting of the Cambridge National City Bank.

Strausneider, it was declared yesterday is no more nor less than the mysterious "Jack Leonard," who introduced Coleman to "Big Bill" Kelliher, now on trial on the same charge that is brought against Strausneider.

Known as a confidence man, whose picture is in the rogues' gallery of Boston, and who is said to have served time both in this country and Europe, Strausneider is said to be the man who obtained $500,000 worth of securities from President Walker of the New Britain (Ct.) bank and whose wife, said to be worth a million, returned $500,000 to the bank to square things.

Same Game Ruined Walker.

President Walker was a victim of a "wire" gang and it is said that Strausneider was the head of that aggregation. After Walker took the securities from the bank he turned them over to Strausneider, who cashed them, ostensibly to give the money to Walker, who made a dash for Mexico. But Strausneider kept the money and when Walker was arrested he gave the bank officials information that led to the restitution made by Strausneider's wife.

The arrest of Strausneider on the race track, where he is widely known, especially throughout New England, is said to be unsavory. He is known as "Big Lem," "Big John" and by other aliases. He is the owner of pacers, Gott Rit (2:09¾, and Raybetta J. (2:10¼), and the trotter, Morris S. (2:13¼), and the racing horse Gallagher.

Posed as Rich Broker.

Strausneider posed as a rich broker at his home in a fashionable section of Brooklyn. He dressed in the height of fashion, dashed about in a powerful automobile and spent money with the prodigality of a prince. The officials of the Government who have been working to bind the gang that robbed Coleman and the cash of the little national bank which paid him $12 a week were in a cheerful mood yesterday as a result of the bagging of this big game.

Strausneider's case will go before the Federal Grand Jury in Boston when it comes in on the third Tuesday in June. It had not been decided yet whether the new prisoner would be brought to Boston yesterday, but he may be brought here anytime the Government desires without extradition papers.

The arraignment of Strausneider in Brooklyn and the bedding him much heavy bail will be but one of the developments in connection with the Cambridge bank robbery. Others were:

The news that Strausneider was identified in New York on the mysterious trip Coleman made to that city with his father shortly before the bank cases were called for trial.

The finding of a new woman witness, to whom it is said Coleman formerly paid attention, by the government's detectives. She is a pretty girl of about twenty-six.

The report on what should be good authority that Lawyer Atwood, whose real

ELEVEN INJURED IN ELEVATOR ACCIDENT

Pulley Breaks and Drops Workmen Four Stories to the Ground.

LITTLETON, N. H., May 28.—Eleven workmen were seriously injured when the pulley on a hoisting elevator on the new Sears-Roebuck shoe factory here broke and the elevator, with its human load, fell sixty feet to the ground at noon today.

The injured are: Walter Davis, Littleton, right arm broken; Emery Hoole, Littleton, both ankles broken; Charles Gibson, Littleton, left arm broken; William Hildreth, Whitefield, N. H., right ankle broken; Michael Meissaros, Portland, Me., left arm broken in two places; Louis Binney, forty-two, Portland, Me., right arm broken; Two Italians, names not known, fractured legs; three other Italians, names not known, badly bruised.

The Italians were employed as cement mixers and hod carriers. The other men were bricklayers. The new building, which is being erected for the ice Chicago firm, is to be five stories in height. All the men were working on the fourth floor.

At the moment the pulley broke, the rush to get down the ladders, and several of the men started for the hoisting elevator, which was built of light timber on the outside of the southern edge.

The men had been warned by the superintendent of construction that the elevator had been built only for light loads and not for heavy.

The light men, however, crowded upon the elevator and gave the signal for lowering. When the pulley broke, the injured men were removed to the Memorial Hospital.

MAYOR AIDS GORHAM.

Takes Charge of Work of Family of Sewer Victim.

Mayor Fitzgerald yesterday took personal charge of a fund for the family of John Gorham, the sewer department laborer who lost his life in one of the South Boston sewer accidents. It is fortunate and a parody upon justice that the years are so fixed that where a faithful and industrious worker for the city loses his life while on duty that the city is unable to recompense his family in the slightest degree without special legislation, said the Mayor after attending the funeral.

The Mayor made inquiry as to the circumstances of the Gorham family, with a view to finding work for the oldest of the eight children.

LITTLE BOY KILLED UNDER HEAVY WAGON

Playing "Fireman," Driver, Weeping, Placed Under Arrest.

Four-year-old Henry McAlpine was killed by the wheel of a huge Brighton abattoir wagon almost in front of his own door on Franklin street, Somerville, yesterday afternoon.

The driver of the wagon, Timothy Crowley, stopped in Franklin street to ask the way to Flint street. He called to John J. Hourihan who was on the sidewalk and Hourihan directed him.

In the meantime the little boy noticed a step between the front and rear wheel of the wagon and presuming to be a "fireman going to a fire" climbed upon it, turning around to grin at the other children.

"Much obliged," said Crowley to Hourihan and cracked to his horses. The team started and the jar threw the child off under the rear wheel.

Hourihan shouted to Crowley who instantly pulled up, and Hourihan and the heavy wagon from the body of the child and passed it to a woman. It was taken into Ramsey's drug store where the little boy died almost instantly.

"I never saw him. I wouldn't hurt the little fellow for the world," declared Driver Crowley and he broke down completely. Patrolman Hayes, who had investigated, came along and arrested him but at the station house the docket entry was made Bailey Henry's body was taken home to his father and mother at No. 12 Franklin street.

WANT SCHOOL RAZED.

Roxbury Residents Would Tear Down Old Building.

Roxbury citizens are fighting to have the School Board tear down the old school building adjoining the new Dearborn school house at Centre park and Ambrose streets and use the land for a yard for the 600 pupils.

In Roxbury it is said that the Dearborn is the only schoolhouse in Boston without a yard. Parents of pupils want space for their children to play during the morning recesses. They say that the old building shuts off light and air from the new one, thereby rendering the latter dangerous. It is said that pupils are made subject to unsightliness, tuberculosis, adenoids and contagious diseases because of proximity of the two buildings.

MORGAN RUFFLED AT RUMORS OF ILLNESS

"I'm Here, Aint I," Financier Snaps, When Told He Is Reported an Invalid.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

LONDON, May 28.—J. Pierpont Morgan was among the crowd of distinguished Americans seeing off their friends on the Lusitania boat train at Euston station this afternoon. He appeared on the platform with his partner, Henry P. Davidson, half an hour before the train started and immediately in a long and intimate talk.

The famous financier could scarcely be recognized in his rather shabby gray suit, his silk hat wanted ironing, his morning coat had evidently seen better days and his trousers were baggy at the knees, crying for an acquaintance with the presser.

At times Mr. Morgan glanced around at passers by, glaring ferociously as though they were endeavoring to hear his talk.

Rebuff No. 1.

"I'm glad to see you looking so well, Mr. Morgan," was the American correspondent's greeting. "Probably you've heard you're lately been reported dead, and you look seriously ill."

"Well," said Mr. Morgan, "I'm here, aint I?"

"Can I say you've never been in better health?" "You certainly look good."

"Don't ask me what you've got to say," retorted Mr. Morgan, whose choler appeared to be rising.

"Tell me then if you're going to New York now."

"No I am not," snapped Mr. Morgan. "Then you're going back to New York?"

"Young man," said Mr. Morgan, "you want to know too much."

Rebuff No. 2.

"I'm told you're going back to New York in two or three weeks."

"Look here," Mr. Morgan blurted fiercely, very vexed, "I've already told you I'm not going to help you by answering questions. Don't you think I'm going back to-day ought to be sufficient for you."

"I should like to tell your New York correspondent, "that there is a report that Sir Caspar Purdon Clarke will be made the first directorship of the Metropolitan Museum."

"Where did that yarn come from?" asked Mr. Morgan.

"From New York."

"Well," said Mr. Morgan, "This is the first I've heard of it."

"Then you cannot say if it is true?"

"I've already told you you don't what's the use. Hey, you cabman, drive me away from here."

AUTHOR CONNOLLY IS NOT QUITE SOOTHED

"Apology" from Washington May Yet Inject Damage Into Ballinger Case.

Whether James B. Connolly, the Boston author of sea tales, will accept as a complete apology the "statement" that Oscar Lawler, assistant Attorney General assigned to the Interior Department, has made to the Ballinger Investigating Committee at Washington, and has also written to Mr. Connolly, is yet to be determined. John W. McAnarney, counsel for Mr. Connolly, said last night that "the point has not been definitely decided."

"I saw the apology this afternoon," Mr. McAnarney said, "when Mr. Connolly brought it to my office. We have taken it under consideration."

Lawler, rising to the defense of Secretary Ballinger against the attacks of the Secretary's critics, denounced Gifford Pinchots and everybody connected with the "prosecution." Apparently having C. P. Connolly in mind—Christopher P., of Montana and New York, who writes for Collier's—Lawler branded Connolly as a coward who had trampled on women and children in his efforts to get off the sinking Republic.

James B. Connolly of Boston, another writer, was on the Republic. His heroism when the ship was doomed was testified to by many. He criticised some of the officers and men of the Republic, and when one of the stewards made the charge against him which Oscar Lawler may have had in mind when he turned on C. P. Connolly, the friends of J. B. Connolly promptly said "quite" and "retaliation." James B. Connolly had also written things about conditions in the steerage of ocean liners.

Mr. Connolly has instructed his attorney to bring suit against Lawler. It was thought yesterday that the Lawler apology might end the matter. "Under consideration," says Lawyer McAnarney.

UNVEIL GEN. DRAPER STATUE TOMORROW

HOPEDALE, May 27.—On Memorial Day the statue of the late General William Draper, former ambassador of the United States to Italy, soldier and rich cotton manufacturer and the brother of Governor Draper, will be unveiled at Hopedale by his daughter, Miss Margaret Preston Draper. The ceremonies will take place at eleven o'clock and will be attended by the members of Major E. F. Fletcher post G. A. R., of Milford, of which General Draper was a member, and by Company "M," M. V. M., also of Milford in which his son went to the frontin the Spanish-American war. Correspondent Weeks will deliver the address. The programme will be directed by Rev. J. C. Lewis of the Memorial church which General Draper and his wife gave the town.

The statue is from the hands of sculptor Courtney Pollock, a native of New York and is of bronze. It is a fine likeness of the soldier and diplomat, who died at his winter home in Washington on January 25. It will rest on a pedestal of Milford pink granite. The pedistal is six feet high and is set on a foundation of solid cement. It is four feet through at the base, five feet at the top and is quite rough. The statue is on the west side of the General's summer home on Adin street.

BALLOON MISSES TRAIN.

Narrow Escape by Boston Man at End of Flight.

SPRINGFIELD, May 28.—Dangling in the basket of a balloon ten feet from a railroad track and fifteen feet in the air, while the balloon was being forty miles an hour whizzed past beneath them was the experience which Jay B. Benton, the Boston aeronaut and three companions experienced this evening.

Mr. Benton attempted an ascendion from the Court square ex-ground, taking with him Louis Dietrick of Boston and Robert Welles and Neuton Waite, Amherst students. The balloon left the ground about 6 o'clock. Fully tw othousand people saw the ascension.

The balloon rose slowly on account of the great weight in the basket an dit continued in this manner the big gas bag caught in a guy wire from a telephone pole a few feet from the New Have railroad tracks. The balloon swung to and fro and the onlookers shrieked.

While the aeronaut was dangling with the men in it, a south bound train for New Haven, Hartford and Springfield at 6:10 o'clock appeared around the turn and dashed by. The balloonists by a few feet only. The guy wire was cut with a knife. The gas escaped rapidly and too men were lowered to the ground.

SLOCOM-BROWN WEDDING.

NEWPORT, May 28.—All roads led to Middletown this evening for the wedding at 6:30 of Louis Brown and Abner L. Slocum at Brookfield Farm, the country seat of the bride's parents, for which 1,000 invitations were issued.

The bride was gowned in white satin court train. Miss Pauline Brown, as maid of honor, wore yellow messaline, bouquet of tulips and lilies of the valley. The matron of honor was Mrs. Everett Clark of Fall River. The bridesmaids were Miss Katherine Holland, Miss Irene Goff, Miss Marion Hare and Miss Lillian Wheeler.

The groom was attended by Colonel Edward A. Sherman and the ushers were Harry Landers, Everett Benson, Dr. Seth de Blois, George K. Austin, Eugene O. Brown and William A. Buckham.

POLICEMAN BATTLES MOB OF 200 AND BAGS PRISONER

Morrissey Badly Battered in Dispersing Gang of Hoodlums in South End.

LANDS YOUTH IN STATION

Captain Told Him to Clean Up Rowdy Corner and He Obeyed Orders Literally.

SURROUNDED by a crowd of fully 200 men and boys, nearly all of whom were negroes, who tried to liberate a prisoner he had arrested, Policeman Patrick Morrissey of the East Dedham station battled with his captive and one hostile for nearly half an hour at the corner of Hamburg street and Harrison avenue, South End, last night, and finally won out.

Eugene Odeum, who declared he was but sixteen years of age, of No. 37 West Lenox street, was landed in the station house. He is a young negro giant of six feet and weighs 200 pounds. His head was cut. So were the heads of many of his associates.

Morrissey looked as though he had been run through a threshing machine. His clothing was almost torn from his body. His helmet was smashed. His club was gone. There was a button on his coat. His left thumb was dislocated.

Told to Clean Up Corntr.

Complaints had reached the station house for some time that a gang was to the habit of gathering at the corner of Hamburg street and Harrison avenue in the evening, to the great annoyance of pedestrians. Before Morrissey went on duty last night his captain said to him:

"Morrissey, I want you to clean that corner off."

"And Morrissey promised that he would. Never a colored gang at 9:15 and reached the congested point, sure enough there were about twenty-five young men on the corner.

Some of them moved and some of them didn't. One of the laggards was Odeum. Morrissey gave him a blow.

Fights Off Rowdies.

"Quit that—who're you shoving?" cried the young man.

Morrissey kept on shoving. Odeum's friends began to gather, and show fight. They yelled at the policeman decisively. They insulted him. The crowd began to grow. Morrissey by this time had pulled off Odeum and had placed him under arrest. When this was done the crowd was ugly. The two fought their displeasure in such shouts as these:

"Kill the cop!"

"Cut his throat!"

"Whose got a razor?"

The crowd closed in on the policeman, and finally Morrissey was knocked down. He called for help. Help came in the name of the law. Shouts of laughter greeted his demand. Some one yanked his club from his hand. They kicked his helmet through the street. They ripped his coat open, making the buttons fly through the air.

But Morrissey held on to his prisoner. He regained his feet. He and the prisoner were covered with blood. The policeman made one motion toward his pistol pocket. And the crowd shunk back. Then Morrissey staggered with Odeum to the station house, told his story, and the doctor was called in.

Grow Tall In Virginia.

When Morrissey found that the prisoner was only sixteen years of age he gazed at the boy in astonishment.

"Wh-h-e-r-e'd you come from?" the policeman gasped.

"Why down in Vaginyah," replied the young negro. "We growa tall down there."

Odeum was placed on the books of the police as a disorderly, ordered to go and ordered to appear in court on Tuesday.

$200 Fourth in Haverhill.

HAVERHILL, May 28.—The citizens of Haverhill want more money spent by the city for decorations during the Fourth of July, and as a result Aldeman Bean will introduce an order, asking that the appropriation of $200 be increased. The citizens declare that Haverhill cannot celebrate a national holiday properly with but $200 to spend.

Bown-Tail Moths Banish Cottagers

HYDEN, May 28.—The principal summer cottagey at Lake Bome is the brown-tail moth. Swarms of them occupy the place, to the exclusion of regular Summer residents. Several families, which came here for the opening of the season, have given up in disgust and gone back home, to await the departure of the pests.

All sections of the lake are infested. The cottages as well as the trees are frescoed with moths.

The regular season at the lake will be about a month late on account of the brown-tails. Walter H. Goodrich and other men are spraying trees and cottages on the West side of the lake. Contractor John H. Bowers and a gang of men are trying to build a cottage, but are having hard work on account of the moths getting in the way. The brown-tails get all over by the way, has never destined the class of the building material and make a sticky mess of everything.

Resents "Rudeness" of Wellesley Girls

Making fun of teachers, playing pranks upon them, breaking college rules and all that is fair sport, according to college ethics.

But the "rudeness" of which a writer in the current number of the College News complains is real rudeness, sheer lack of manners, one would judge. This is the way the article reads:

"It may be that the girls in one of my classes are willing to show their instructor ordinary politeness, but, if so, it is not very apparent. The moment the preliminary buzz of the bell sounds, pages flutter, books are collected, perhaps dropped on the floor in the process. Gentally pen tops are snapped on with a violent click, and their owners talk out loud and start up from their seats without paying the slightest attention to the instructor. This instructor, by the way, has never detained the class one moment after the bell sounded."

SENTENCE SOON FOLLOWS

"I'm Not Guilty, Children," Woman Tells Daughters as She Takes Train.

FOUND guilty of murder in the second degree for the killing of young Stewart McTavish, Elizabeth Richmond was taken to teh Women's Reformatory at Sherborn yesterday, from the courthouse at East Cambridge, to be confined at hard labor for the remainder of her natural life.

The woman took her sentence calmly. Her eyes were bright and her color good, as, leaving the courtroom on the arm of a matron, she said: "Well, I won't have to look out for anybody any more." She is fifty-five years old.

Up to the last, until the closed carriage was on its way to the North Station, the three young daughters of the prisoner remained a her side.

Adeline, Isabel and Agnes Brass did not live in their mother's "Hotel Florence" boarding house, where 22-year-old Stewart McTavish met his death. Children by an earlier marriage, they did not like the atmosphere and the companions of their mother's later life.

Girls Stood by Mother.

The girls, ranging in age from eighteen to twenty-five years, furnished the one bright spot in the colorless trial which followed a commonplace murder. They had long lived away from her. They knew something of her life at the Hotel Florence, but they did not know her associates there. They were hetr-ring themselves, in education and position.

Once trouble came, however, it was mother above everything. Day after day they went to her at the jail. Day after day they sat by her side in the court room, much observed but paying nothing to say except to this gay-haired woman on trial for her life.

The jury was out nineteen hours. There was a story about the court house that they stood seven to five. Once they came in for instructions. Then, just before 2 in the afternoon came the finding of the jury bell, signifying an agreement.

Guilty in Second Degree.

After that it was all over speedily. Judge Crosby and Judge Dubuque had been waiting in the judge's room. They came in and took their places. The jury followed quickly. Clerk Calahoon asked:

"Mr. Foreman," he said, "have you agreed upon a verdict?"

"We have," replied J. Parker G. Fisk of Newton, millionaire manufacturer.

The prisoner was ordered to rise. She faced the jury.

"And what is your verdict, Mr. Foreman?"

"Guilty of murder in the second degree."

Foreman Fisk pronounced the words with a stammer. He seemed to be uncomfortable. Mrs. Richmond was self-possessed. You could hear the sobs of her younger daughter.

Jury Recommended Mercy.

The jury had recommended mercy. Judge Crosby made it plain that under the law only one sentence was possible.

Attorney Ralph Glover said something about "exceptions." He was given until July 3 to file them.

Then came the departure for the cell. The daughters went to the back door.

"Children," said Elizabeth Richmond, "I never did this terrible thing. I want you to believe that of me, that I am innocent."

They sobbed their good-byes and turned sorrowing to the friends who were waiting. Then the carriage drew off, and, in the eyes of the law, Stewart McTavish was avenged.

The Hotel Florence, where McTavish was killed on July 23 of last year, was situated at No. 135 Cambridge street, East Cambridge, almost opposite the Union House in which the trial was held. According to the surgical experts, McTavish's death was due to a bullet wound and injuries inflicted with an axe.

Santa Fe Uses Phones.

TOPEKA, Kan., May 28.—Contracts have been let for equipping the Santa Fe system with telephone service to replace the telegraph for train dispatching between Albuquerque and Modave. With the completion of this service and the closing of a few gaps between Albuquerque and Newton, Kan., the Santa Fe will have superseded the telegraph with the telephone on the entire system between Chicago and the Pacific Coast, save between Modave and Bakersfield, where the Southern Pacific tracks are used.

Corner-Stone Box Opened.

HAVERHILL, May 28.—The copper box which was placed under the cornerstone of Odd Fellows building in 1872, at the dedication of the structure, was opened to-day, and many newspapers and documents and records that had been placed in the box were found intact. The old Odd Fellows building is being torn down, and the records were read with much interest after thirty-eight years, by the officers of the lodge.

Plan to Close Mills Fails.

FALL RIVER, May 28.—The movement to close the cotton mills here for the whole of Memorial Day week has fallen through. A large majority of the treasurers desired to stop, but the few who held out were sufficient to check the movement.

EVA BOOTH, WHO TELLS TO CHURCH STORY OF SLUMS

COMMANDER MISS BOOTH

SIX HUNDRED MARCH IN SALVATION RANKS

Eva Booth Today Speaks in Brookline Church; Tonight in Rags Tells of Slums.

The third day of the four-day New England Congress of the Salvation Army in Boston yesterday was marked by a parade, in which 500 men and women and 200 children appeared.

After several district meetings to-day the Congress will close with a grand united demonstration to-night in the Mandolin Theatre, in which Commander Eva Booth will make her famous appearance "in rags," wearing the costume she wore when doing missionary work in the London slums.

Yesterday's Congress proceedings began with a council of officers at the Temple Palace, conducted by Colonel William Peart of New York, American secretary of the Salvation Army. Commander Booth addressed the officers, explaining her latest ideas in regard to the work.

Six Bands in Line.

At 2:30 all formed for the street parade. Commander Booth did not participate. But she witnessed the formation and start of the parade from the People's Palace. The line of march was: Band, Brookline street, Colonel Peart leading. Following him came Colonel Adam Gifford, in charge of the New England province. The main body of the parade was composed of alternate files of children and Salvation workers. Six bands, comprising 100 converted members, furnished stirring music.

All the children and Salvationists carried American flags. The white dresses of the little girls, the blue and red uniforms of the Salvationists and the red, white and blue of the manifold Stars and Stripes made an attractive color scheme.

Turning down Washington street the parade marched to Court, Tremont, Boylston and Charles street to Boston Common, where 2,000 people gathered for the open-air mass meeting. Prayer by Major Cowan of Portland was followed by exercises led by Colonels Gifford, Duncan and Cox.

When the line of march was retraced, through Tremont street, up Tremont to Dover, down Washington and to the People's Palace, where the parade disbanded.

At 7:45 the Salvationists started out in ten groups and held open-air district meetings. At 8 o'clock there was a big meeting in the People's Palace, with addresses by several officers.

To-day a program will begin at 10:15 in the morning and last till the close of the Majestic Theatre meeting to-night.

Services At Churches.

At the theatre meeting Miss Booth will appear in rags to tell the more graphically how the submerged tenth of London and other big cities live and suffer.

Her sermon to-day at the Church of Rev. Dr. G. T. Gifford, in Brookline, will be on "Omnipotence Unglued," and also will tell the well-dressed and wealthy congregation some truths about their less fortunate brothers and sisters.

Church services during the day will be held at Tremont Street M. E. Church, where Col. William Peart will speak at the regular services; Warren Avenue Baptist Church, at 10:30, and Ruggles Street Baptist, at 7:30, when Lieutenant-Colonel Duncan will speak; Episcopal Church of the Good Shepherd, on Cortes street, where Lieut.-Col. W. Cox, will speak at 10:30; Bowdoin Square Tabernacle, where Col. J. Margetts will speak at 7:30 p. m. Mrs. Major Sheppard will speak at the 10:30 service of the Central Congregational Church, Jamaica Plain, and Major Cowan will be heard at the 10:30 service of the Revere Baptist Church.

$50,000 LOST BY YOUTH.

New York Banker's Son Failure as a Speculator.

NEW YORK, May 28.—Oscar L. Richard, president of the State Bank and head of the firm of C. H. Richard & Co., bankers, of No. 31 Broadway, declared to-day that his son had lost between $50,000 and $60,000 in speculations handled by the stock exchange house of E. F. Hutton & Co., which was suspended from the exchange for one year. Mr. Richard admitted making charges against the firm to the board of governors of the exchange, but because he wanted to get back the money, but because he said he wanted to "teach a lesson that others." The Hutton firm was exonerated on the charges made by Mr. Richard, but suspended on a charge of having split commissions with one of the employes.

PAYS $1 A WEEK FOR LIFE.

Man Ordered by Court to Settle Debts Thus.

NEW YORK, May 28.—Charles D. Martin, of No. 300 Hamilton avenue, Paterson, N. J., when brought before Circuit Judge Black for contempt of court in failing to liquidate an indebtedness of $801, was ordered to pay $1 a week until the obligation is cleared.

Expert accountants roughly estimate it will take Martin at least twenty-five years to pay the debt and interest. He is now forty years of age, and will be sixty-five the average life when he will receive his receipt "paid in full."

Martin informed the court that he received $12 a week income from his business, and of this amount must pay $9 a week alimony to his wife.

AGED MAN IS KILLED, THREE INJURED IN AUTO CRASH

John Allen, 86, Loses Life As Result of Collision With Car in Brighton.

ONE man was killed, two others and a girl hurt, a gasoline tank exploded, occupants of a crowded street car were thrown in panic and a valuable automobile wrecked as the result of a collision at 7 o'clock last night at the corner of Arlington and Market streets, Brighton.

The dead man is John Allen, eighty-six years of age, of No. 112 Charlesbank street, Newton. He received concussion of the brain and died at 10 o'clock at the home of his son, No. 5 Eleanora street, Brighton.

The injured are:

MISS MARION T. STEARNS, thirteen, of Brighton; cut and bruised, suffering from shock.

MR. CHARLES C. ALLEN, thirty-five years, of No. 5 Eleanor strtet, Brighton; cut and bruised.

DANIEL MURPHY, thirty-two, of No. 85 Prospect street, Cambridge; head badly cut and body covered with bruises.

Dr. Allen Was Driving.

Dr. Allen was driving his own three-seated automobile last evening. His aged father sat directly behind him and in the third seat was little Marion Stearns. The doctor, keeping a keen look-out, was driving his car along Arlington street. Just as the automobile was bowling across Market street, where there is a decided hill, a crowded open car came down the grade.

Dr. Allen saw the car and tried hurry his machine across the track and out of harm's way. At the same time the motorman of the trolley car, in bound western, tried to check it. The steep hill and the ruts of the heavily loaded car made this impossible and with a crack heard for blocks the car struck the automobile just as it reached the centre of the track. Women in the trolley car screamed in fright.

Men leaped from both running boards of the street car when they saw that a collision was inevitable and many were hurled sprawling on the street. Daniel Murphy struck on his head and shoulders.

The automobile and its three passengers was lifted from the ground and driven several feet. Marion Stearns was jumped just as the collision came and was not heavily and was bruised and badly shaken up.

The elder Mr. Allen struck the pavement violently. He was rendered unconscious. The automobile crashed against the heavy iron fence in front of St. Columbkille's Catholic Church. The machine was wrecked.

Mr. Allen fell from the auto just as it crashed into the strong iron fence and he received severe cuts and bruises.

Rush Aid to Injured.

The motorman and conductor of the street car, as soon as the car was brought to a standstill, hurried to give aid to the injured who were lying on the ground where they struck. Dr. A. A. McAuliffe of No. 3 Harvard st., Brighton, hurried to the scene and cared for the victims, who were taken home.

John Allen, with his son, Dr. Allen, was returning at the time of the accident from the cemetery, where the aged man had gone to place a wreath of flowers on the grave of his wife, who died in 1904. He was well-off financially. He was born in Leominster and when a young man moved to Dorchester. He and his brother, Henry, manufactured the Allen plaster.

City Hall Gossip.

An effort upon the part of friends of Leo F. McCullough, former president of the Common Council now serving a two-year sentence at Deer Island, to have him pardoned has been abandoned because it is understood that Governor Draper looked unfavorably upon the proposition. McCullough can request a parole on September 21 and if it is acted upon favorably by the district attorney and the penal commissioner, he will be released conditionally about that date. Ex-Alderman Bates is eligible to make a similar application on July 3, 1911. Both were sentenced on July 3, 1909.

It is quite likely that there will be no deputy penal commissioner appointed by Mayor Fitzgerald for some time. There were quite a few applicants for the job, and in fact John J. Sullivan of Ward 2 was slated for it until it was officially declared a civil service job. In order to fill the position now, Mayor Fitzgerald must make a requisition for candidates to the Civil Service Commission. There is no list of civil service candidates for such a position and the commissioners would be compelled to hold an examination.

For the position of deputy superintendent of the sewer department now held by C. Harlon Pratt, the administration is credited with being desirous of appointing either James Cowdrey, a sewer inspector of the department or William F. Doherty, a foreman of the Sewall street job. Both took the civil service examination.

If John Hardiman is appointed to succeed A. Haas as foreman of the Dorchester yard of the street department it will not be within the civil service classification of streets. Haas's resignation goes into effect on Tuesday, July 5, and nobody has been chosen to succeed him. Superintendent Doran is credited with being opposed to Garrity because of the conduct of the Dorchester yard under Garrity during the first Fitzgerald administration.

How long can Attorney Francis M. Carroll fulfill the duties of acting fire commissioner at $5,000 per year? is a friend being asked by City Hall gy those who think that perhaps Mayor Fitzgerald may have other ideas in mind in connection with the Civil Service Commission? The answer appears to be, definitely, until the Mayor finds some candidate to fill the position permanently.

IS BEST FOR THE CHILDREN

Mothers whose children are weak and run down, who do not gain flesh and strength, who lack the bright eyes of healthy childhood, should remember that the safest tonic and body builder to give them is Father John's Medicine, because it is a pure and wholesome food medicine free from alcohol or dangerous drugs. Thousands of mothers give it to their children whenever they become weakened or run down.

MRS. RICHMOND GOES TO SHERBORN TO END HER DAYS

SENTENCE SOON FOLLOWS

"I'm Not Guilty, Children," Woman Tells Daughters as She Takes Train.

FOUND guilty of murder in the second degree for the killing of young Stewart McTavish, Elizabeth Richmond was taken to teh Women's Reformatory at Sherborn yesterday, from the courthouse at East Cambridge, to be confined at hard labor for the remainder of her natural life.

The woman took her sentence calmly. Her eyes were bright and her color good, as, leaving the courtroom on the arm of a matron, she said: "Well, I won't have to look out for anybody any more." She is fifty-five years old.

Up to the last, until the closed carriage was on its way to the North Station, the three young daughters of he prisoner remained a her side.

Adeline, Isabel and Agnes Bruce did not live in their mother's "Hotel Florence" boarding house, where 22-year-old Stewart McTavish met his death. Children by an earlier marriage, they did not like the atmosphere and the companions of their mother's later life.

Girls Stood by Mother.

The girls, ranging in age from eighteen to twenty-five years, furnished the one bright spot in the colorless trial which followed a commonplace murder. They had long lived away from her. They knew something of her life at the "Hotel Florence, but they did not know her associates there. They were loyal to themselves, in education and position.

One trouble came, however. It was mother above everything. Day after day they went to her at the jail. Day after day they sat by her side in the court room, much observed but paying nothing to say except to this gay-hatted woman on trial for her life.

The jury was out nineteen hours. There was a story about the court house that they stood seven to five. Once they came in for instructions. Then, just before 2 in the afternoon came the ringing of the jury bell, signifying an agreement.

Guilty in Second Degree.

After that it was all over speedily. Judge Crosby and Judge Dana had been waiting in the judge's room. They came in and took their places. The jury followed quickly. Clerk Ambrose arose.

"Mr Foreman," he said, "have you agreed upon a verdict?"

"We have," replied J. Parker G. Fisk of Newton, millionaire manufacturer.

The jury was then polled. She faced the jury.

"Gentlemen of the jury, look upon the prisoner. Elizabeth, look upon the jury." "And what is your verdict, Mr. Foreman?

"Guilty of murder in the second degree."

Foreman Fisk pronounced the words with a stammer. He seemed to be uncomfortable. Mrs. Richmond was self-possessed. You could hear the sobs of her younger daughter.

Jury Recommended Mercy.

The jury had recommended mercy. Judge Crosby made it plain that under the law only one sentence was possible.

Attorney Ralph Gilaig said something about "exceptions." He was given until July 3 to file them.

Then came he departure for the station. The daughters went to the back door.

"Children," said Elizabeth Richmond, "I never did this terrible thing. I want you to believe me. For that I am innocent."

They sobbed their good-byes and turned sorrowing to the friends who were waiting. Then the carriage drove off, and, in the eyes of the law, Stewart McTavish was avenged.

The fatal fracas in which young McTavish was killed on July 23 of last year, was situated at No. 135 Cambridge street, East Cambridge, almost opposite the Court House in which the trial was held. According to the surgical experts, McTavish's death was due to a bullet wound and injuries inflicted with an axe.

Santa Fe Uses Phones.

TOPEKA, Kan., May 28.—Contracts have been let for equipping the Santa Fe system with telephone service to replace the telegraph for train dispatching between Albuquerque and Mojave. With the completion of this service and the closing of a few gaps between Albuquerque and Newton, Kan., the Santa Fe will have superseded the telegraph with the telephone on its entire system between Chicago and the Pacific Coast, save between Mojave and Bakersfield, where the Southern Pacific tracks are used.

Corner-Stone Box Opened.

HAVERHILL, May 28.—The copper box which was placed under the cornerstone of Odd Fellows building in 1872, at the dedication of the structure, was opened today, and many newspapers, periodicals and records that had been placed in the box were found intact. The Odd Fellows building is being torn down, and the records were read with much interest after thirty-eight years, by the officers of the lodge.

Plan to Close Mills Fails.

FALL RIVER, May 28.—The movement to close the cotton mills here for the whole of one special July week has fallen through. A large majority of the treasurers desired to stop, but the few who held out were sufficient to check the movement.

EVA BOOTH, WHO TELLS TO CHURCH STORY OF SLUMS

COMMANDER MISS BOOTH.

SIX HUNDRED MARCH IN SALVATION RANKS

Eva Booth Today Speaks in Brookline Church; Tonight in Rags Tells of Slums.

The third day of the four-day New England Congress of the Salvation Army in Boston yesterday was marked by a parade, in which 500 men and women and 250 children appeared.

After several district meetings today the Congress will close with a grand united demonstration tonight in the Majestic Theatre, in which Commander Eva Booth will make her famous appearance "in rags," wearing the costume she wore when doing missionary work in the London slums.

Yesterday's Congress proceedings began with a council of officers at the People's Palace, conducted by Colonel William Peart of New York, American secretary of the Salvation Army. Commander Booth addressed the officers, explaining her latest ideas in regard to the work.

Six Bands in Line.

At 2:30 all formed for the street parade. Commander Booth did not march. But she witnessed the formation and start of the parade from the People's Palace. The line formed on East Brookline street, Colonel Peart leading. Following him came Colonel Adams Gifford, in charge of the New England province. The music body of the parade was composed of alternate files of children and Salvation workers. Six bands, comprising 100 converted members, furnished stirring music.

All the children and Salvationists carried American flags. The white dresses of the little girls, the blue and red uniforms of the Salvationists and the red, white and blue of the manifold Stars and Stripes made an attractive color scheme.

Turning down Washington street the parade marched to Court, Tremont, Boylston and Charles street to Boston Common, where 2,000 people gathered for the open-air mass meeting. Brigadier Duncan Cowan of Portland was followed by exercises from Colonels Gifford, Dumas and Cox.

Then the line of march was retraced, through Tremont street, up Tremont to Bowdoin, down Washington and to the People's Palace, where a reception was held.

At 7:15 the Salvationists started out in ten groups and held open-air district meetings. At 8 o'clock there was a big meeting in the People's Palace, with addresses by several officers.

Today's program will begin at 10:15 in the morning and last till the close of the Majestic Theatre meeting tonight.

Services At Churches.

At the theatre meeting Miss Booth will appear in rags to tell the more graphically how the submerged tenth of London and other big cities live and suffer.

Her sermon today at the Church of Rev. Dr. O. P. Gifford, in Brookline, will be on "Omnipotence Unfurled," and she will tell the well-dressed and wealthy congregation some truths about their less fortunate brothers and sisters.

Church services during the day will be held at Tremont Temple, M. E. Church, where Col. William Peart will speak at the regular services; Warren Avenue Baptist Church, at 10:30, and Ruggles Street Baptist, at 7:30, when Lieutenant-Colonel Duncan will speak; Episcopal Church of the Good Shepherd, on Cortes street, where Lieut.-Col. W. Cox will speak at 10:30; Bowdoin Square Tabernacle, where Col. J. Margetts will speak at 7:30 p.m. Mrs. Major Sheppard will speak at the 10:30 service of the Central Congregational church, Jamaica Plain, and Major Cowan will be heard at the 10:30 service of the Revere Baptist Church.

$50,000 LOST BY YOUTH.

New York Banker's Son Failure as a Speculator.

NEW YORK, May 28.—Oscar L. Richard, president of the State Bank and head of the firm of C. B. Richard & Co., bankers, of No. 31 Broadway, declared to-day that his son had lost between $50,000 and $60,000 in speculations handled by the stock exchange house of E. F. Hutton & Co., which was suspended from the exchange for one year. Mr. Richard admitted making charges against the firm to the board of governors of the exchange, but because he wanted to get back the money, but because he said he wanted to "teach a lesson to others." The Hutton firm was exonerated on the charges made by Mr. Richard, but suspended on a charge of having split commissions with one of the employes.

PAYS $1 A WEEK FOR LIFE.

Man Ordered by Court to Settle Debts Thus.

NEW YORK, May 28.—Charles D. Martin, of No. 309 Hamilton avenue, Paterson, N. J., when brought before Circuit Judge Black for contempt of court in failing to liquidate an indebtedness, which was ordered to pay $1 a week until the obligation is cleared.

Expert accountants roughly estimate it will take Martin at least twenty-five years to pay the debt and interest. He is now forty years of age, and will be sixty-five, the average life, when he will receive his receipt "paid in full."

Martin informed the court that he received $12 a week income from his business, and of this amount must pay $9 a week alimony to his wife.

AGED MAN IS KILLED, THREE INJURED IN AUTO CRASH

ONE man was killed, two others and a girl hurt, a gasoline tank exploded, occupants of a crowded street car were thrown in panic and a valuable automobile wrecked as the result of an accident at 7 o'clock last night at the corner of Arlington and Market streets, Brighton.

The dead man is John Allen, eighty-six years of age, of No. 112 Charlesbank street, Newton. He received concussion of the brain and died at 10 o'clock at the home of his son, No. 5 Eleanora street, Brighton.

The injured are:

MISS MARION T. STEARNS, thirteen, of Brighton; cut and bruised, suffering from shock.

DR. CHARLES C. ALLEN, thirty-five years, of No. 5 Eleanor street, Brighton; cut and bruised.

DANIEL MURPHY, motorman, of No. 85 Prospect street, Cambridge; head badly cut and body covered with bruises.

Dr. Allen Was Driving.

Dr. Allen was driving his own three-seated automobile last evening. His aged father sat directly behind him and in the front seat was little Marion Stearns. The doctor, keeping a keen lookout, was driving his car along Arlington street. Just as the automobile was bowling across Market street, where there is a decided hill, a crowded open car ran down the grade.

Dr. Allen saw the car and tried to hurry his machine across the track and knew it impossible and with a crack heard for blocks the car struck the automobile just as it reached the centre of the track. Women in the trolley car screamed in fright.

Men leaped from both rushing boards of the street car when they saw that a collision was inevitable and many were hurled sprawling on the street. Daniel Murphy struck on his head and shoulders.

The automobile and its three passengers was lifted from the ground and driven several feet. Marion Stearns half jumped, half was thrown from the car, and escaped with only a bruised arm and shock. Dr. Allen was thrown violently to the ground and received a deep cut on the head.

Rush Aid to Injured.

The motorman and conductor of the street car, as soon as the car was brought to a standstill, hurried to give aid to the injured. Women in the car screamed where they stuck.

Dr. A. A. McAuliffe of No. 1 Arlington st., Brighton, hurried to the scene and cared for the victims, who were taken home.

John Allen, with his son, Dr. Allen, was returning home at the time of the accident from the ceremonies at which the latter had gone to place a wreath of flowers on the grave of his wife, who died a year ago. He was well-off financially. He was born in Leominster and for many years was moved to Dorchester. He and his brother, Henry, manufactured the Allen planos.

City Hall Gossip.

An effort upon the part of friends of Leo F. McCullough, former president of the Common Council now serving a two-year sentence at Deer Island, to have him pardoned has been abandoned because it is understood that Governor Draper looked unfavorably upon the proposition. McCullough can be released conditionally on September 21, and if it is noted upon favorably by the district attorney and the court at that time, he will be released conditionally on that date. Under the terms Butts is eligible to make a similar application on September 21, 1911, and on January 21 and July 3, 1909.

It is understood that there will be no deputy penn commissioner appointed by Mayor Fitzgerald for some time. There were quite a few applications for the job, and in fact John F. Sullivan of Ward 2 was wanted for the job officially or offered a civil service job. In order to fill the position now, Mayor Fitzgerald must make a requisition for candidates to the Civil Service Commission. There is no list of civil service candidates for such a position now, so the commission will be compelled to hold an examination.

Should the position of deputy superintendent of the penal department now held by C. Barton Pratt, the administration is credited with the intention of replacing either James J. Conway, chief inspector of the House of Correction at Deer Island, or Foreman Hall of the South Boston yard. Both have been in the service for years.

If John F. Gargity succeeds Benjamin Flynn as foreman of the Deer Island yard of the street department it will not be long before Flynn is appointed superintendent. Superintendent Ferson is credited with being opposed to Gargity and with having forced the latter out of the position of foreman of the Deerisland yard under him during the Curley administration. Superintendent Ferson is credited with being opposed to Gargity and with having forced the latter out of the position of foreman of the Deerisland yard under him during the Curley administration.

How long can Attorney Francis M. Carroll safely remain out of the city commissioner at $5,000 per year? is already being asked by City Hall gossips. Some think that perhaps Mayor Fitzgerald may not "see the wisdom" of Carroll remaining on the Civil Service Commission. The answer appears to be, indefinitely, or until the mayor finds a candidate to fill the position permanently.

IS BEST FOR THE CHILDREN

Mothers whose children are pale and weak and run down, who do not gain flesh and strength, who lack the rosy cheeks and bright eyes of healthy childhood, should remember that the best tonic and body builder to give them is Father John's Medicine, because it is a pure and wholesome food medicine free from alcohol or dangerous drugs. Thousands of mothers give it to their children whenever they become weakened or run down.

EX-CONVICT STRAUSNEIDER NAMED AS MAN WHO FLEECED COLEMAN

New York Faro Gang Has Swindled Business Men Out of Millions

Man Arrested in Brooklyn on Charge of Helping Coleman Loot Cambridge Bank is Declared to be One Who Ruined Walker of New Britain and Restored $500,000 to Avoid Prison.

ame is said to be Laura Arnold, has been ested by the Government and will be a witness in the Keliher trial.

The fact that Charlie Tibbetts is not Charlie Carter, the faro dealer, with whom oleman did such a lasting business in New ork.

It was while Coleman was on the witness stand, baring the secrets of the faro ng as he knew them, that the name Straunsneider came out. Wilson Lock- art had alluded to him as a friend of Keliher when he was on the stand. Coleman brought him into the Keliher case when he got to the point where he was trying to get enough money from Keliher to get out of town but before he left for Kansas City.

Met Strausneider First.

Keliher, according to the testimony of Coleman, protested that he did not have much money.

"Keliher said," added Coleman, "that he had between $8,000 and $4,000 of money belonging to his friend Strausneider, and that Strausneider might be willing to loan him or give me some of it. He then went out in search of him and about an hour later returned and said that he had been unable to find him. Then he told me he had $8,000 of his own money in his safe deposit. I told him that wouldn't pay my hotel bill for the week and he gave me a check for $150, which I presented to the cashier of the Hotel Lenox in payment for my bill."

According to Coleman, he met "Jack," as he said now to be Strausneider before he met Keliher. When Coleman was taken to New York by Frank Draper to play faro he met Charlie Carter and "Jack." Coleman lost $50,000 and decided to quit the game, but that he told "Jack" that he had been taking money from the bank.

Alluring Bait for Coleman.

Early in May last year "Jack" came to Boston and got Coleman in touch with Keliher. They met on Boston Common. Keliher held out an alluring bait for Coleman to bite at, which was to bring him the gift of the thousands that he had lost. Keliher was then Keliher is a man of money," said "Jack's" story to Coleman. "I am on the inside of the game to New York, as you know. Now I have got Jack Keliher so that he will win a pile. He is to give me $50,000 as my share and I'll slip it to you to make up the money you lost with me to New York."

That looked good to Coleman, he said, and then he began to make his trips to New York a regular affair with Keliher. He always found "Jack" waiting for them, and "Jack" gave them what purported to be the right tip as to which card to play. They played and lost, played and lost, and kept it up all Summer.

"Jack" was the big man in the game, according to Coleman. He was the man who told Coleman that things could not go wrong, and for him to return and get some money and he would make it right for him. So each time Coleman and Keliher to get all the money in the Cambridge National City Bank, Coleman testified, that when the games closed in New York they induced him to go to Buffalo and tackle the tiger there.

Coleman lost $2,000 without even seeing the game played. They told him to hurry back to Boston and get some more. He did so, Keliher making the round trip with him. He put $4,000 more into the game and again lost. Something went wrong. "Jack" made an error." That was all the satisfaction Coleman got.

When the game was all up and the money all gone from the bank, "Jack" came to Boston and blubbered. Coleman said, pleading with him to get $5,000 more "for God's sake." "Jack" had a wife and she needed the money!

Looking at Comet When Taken.

It was the mysterious "Jack," now declared to be Strausneider, who gave Coleman the dubious consolation that he would probably not get more than ten years in jail, that Atlanta was a millionaire's palace, anyhow, and he could get everything he wanted with money. Coleman testified that his friends would look out for him and keep busy, and that they certainly would make a good turn some time while he was in durance vile and then when he came out there would be something for him to make another start on.

That's the story that Coleman told about "Jack" and it is declared that Coleman himself has identified Strausneider as "Jack."

Strausneider is a massively built man, 6 feet 2 inches tall, smooth shaven, and erect in carriage. A part of a finger of his right hand is missing, and the detectives produced a photograph from the police gallery and a Bertillon description that fitted him.

Strausneider lived with his wife and had a number of servants. He dressed stylishly and was much respected by residents of the Parkville (Brooklyn) district. His appearances seemed to bear out the assertions he made concerning his business and his wealth.

When the detectives took Strausneider into custody on Friday night he was out in his yard, very lightly clad, looking at the comet. He said that his arrest was a surprise. He said that he had been over in New Jersey the day before making arrangements to take a string of horses through New England and up into Canada.

He said that he knew both Coleman and Keliher, but denied that he had anything to do with the "grooming" of Coleman.

"If I had been mixed up in that thing, I would not have stuck around," Strausneider declared. "I learned early in my career that it is a bad thing to trim an honest man, but it is safe business to take money away from a crook."

"I never trimmed a man yet," he told a reporter not long ago, "who didn't think he was helping me rob somebody else. They are always willing to go into a scheme to swindle another party, and sometimes they squeal when they find they have been swindled themselves."

Some years ago Strausneider got caught running a crooked foot race and was sentenced to five years in the Trenton penitentiary. Discussing that episode in his life, he said:

"Safer to Trim Crooks."

"The suckers bit. They couldn't come to it fast enough. But it was I who got burned that time. It is safer to trim a crook."

Assistant District Attorney William H. Garland got in touch with the office of District Attorney William J. Youngs in Brooklyn yesterday early on the telephone. He got William P. Allen on the other end of the wire, one of the assistants, and told him to be sure and get the bail of Strausneider as big as possible.

"Don't have it less than $10,000," ordered Garland, "and get it as much larger as you can." So when Strausneider was arraigned and Edward J. Brennan, special agent of the Department of Justice, had made his charge against the prisoner, his bail was fixed at $25,000.

Extradition Unnecessary.

Neither District Attorney Garland nor Special Agent Schmidt would give out the specific charges against Strausneider except to say that they ranged all the way and meeting the misapplication of the credits of the National City Bank of Cambridge.

Mr. Strausneider is held by the United States Commissioner in New York upon the charge of fugitive, so will present against him, he saw with counsel before the Federal Grand Jury meeting here in June. No extradition proceedings will be necessary to bring Strausneider to Boston.

"In a Federal case suspects, fugitives or others accused of a crime against the United States can be brought from one State to another without consenting the State authorities. It would be improper for me to state just what the Government has gathered against Strausneider in connection with the wrecking of the National City Bank, but we charge him, just as we charge Keliher, with aiding and abetting Coleman in the looting of the bank and in using methods similar to Keliher's luring Coleman to use the funds of the bank in a gambling game."

Coleman was brought early yesterday morning from his cell in the East Cambridge jail to the Post Office building and taken to the office of Marshall Hurley. There he was soon joined by Lawyer Harvey H. Pratt of counsel for Keliher. A few of the books of the looted Cambridge bank was on hand and Coleman was there to point out to Pratt just how he fooled bank officials, examiners and others.

The young man who is in a few days to go to Greenfield to serve his fifteen year sentence did not look as though his troubles were weighing heavily upon him. He was cheerful and smoked his pipe serenely as he showed the astonished lawyer how he had manipulated figures of those books.

Changed $29,000 to $9,000.

For about three hours Coleman and Pratt went over the books. It transpired that one of the largest accounts in the bank was that of President Dresser. This account was what is known as an inactive account, and President Dresser was not liable to pop into the bank and draw out a large sum any day. This account was one that showed $29,000, and Coleman showed how he had subtracted $20,000 from it by simply removing the figure "2" at the beginning of the amount. When lawyer Pratt got through with Coleman the lawyer said:

"I understand how Coleman did it now, it is wonderful. He is certainly a shark at figures. He could do anything with them. But the trouble was that he could not handle the cards in the way he did the figures. If he could have done that he could have won money instead of having lost it."

While Coleman was in the building there came a call for him to go into the District Attorney's office. In there with his counsel, Lawyer James H. Vahey, was Charlie Tibbetts, whose name has been mentioned in connection with the case.

Never Saw Tibbetts Before.

The government had got the idea that Tibbetts was probably the Charlie Carter who was one of the earlier faro dealers who got his hands on Coleman in New York. They wanted Coleman to take a look at Tibbetts, who had been summoned as a witness in the Keliher trial. Mr. Garland accompanied Coleman into the room where Tibbetts was, and this conversation took place:

Mr. Garland to Coleman: "Do you know this man?"

James Strausneider, from a Rogues' Gallery Photograph.

Coleman: "I do not."

Garland: "Did you ever see him before?"

Coleman: "I never did."

Tibbetts: "This is Mr. Coleman?"

Coleman: "Yes."

Valley to Tibbetts: "Did you ever see this man before?"

Tibbetts: "I never saw him before."

May Not Be Called to Stand.

Tibbetts left the building and it was said that he might not be called now even on a witness. Tibbetts is a small dresser. He wears eyeglasses which he seems to think are in constant need of cleaning. His face is smooth and as is he.

A reporter for the Boston Sunday American met Tibbetts as he was leaving the Peabody Building. Tibbetts observed:

"I'm not a bonne man—I'm a farmer."

"A farmer!" queried the reporter in astonishment, as he looked at the spick and span young man.

"Yes, a farmer," reiterated Tibbetts—"a farmer down to Marshfield, Digash. And I don't want all the neighbors down here to think that I had anything to do with a faro game. Why I don't know a faro game from a wheelbarrow. I must get along now and see how those early potatoes are coming up. Right cool Spring, isn't it?"

Coleman to Resume Story.

When the case against Keliher is resumed on Tuesday morning Coleman will again take the stand and cross examination will be continued by Daniel H. Coakley. It is suspected that Miss Maude Hightower will follow him on the stand.

It was said yesterday that Miss Laura Atwood or Arnold, who came to Boston, it is believed as the agent of the faro gang to act as a go-between for Coleman and Big Bill Keliher, and who took Coleman to see Keliher when the former was posted $100,000 to close his mouth and not say anything more would be one of the most important of the witnesses still to be called.

Much speculation has been indulged in as to the nature of the testimony Miss Arnold will be able to give. It is claimed that she was one of Keliher's friends in New York.

The cross-examination of Cashier Frank L. Earl of the bank, which was deferred when he was called to the stand early in the trial, is expected to prove of great interest.

Another witness whose name has not been mentioned in connection with the case, a young woman in blue who was in conference with officials of the Government yesterday, it is said, will likely have testimony that will be eagerly read.

The young woman is a brunette. She was dressed in blue yesterday even to her hat, when she called at the office of District Attorney French to go into conference with the attorneys for the prosecution. She was closeted with Assistant United States District Attorney Garland and Special Agent Schmidt for some time.

"Her testimony will make interesting reading," remarked Schmidt. "She will help the Government's case out materially and will probably be put on as a witness as soon as Coleman finishes. We can't give out her name or address at this time."

It was asserted that the young woman is thoroughly familiar with the workings of the faro gang and is ready to tell all.

Another Arrest Coming.

Tibbetts is a most important witness was indicted when the Government made it known that another New York man would soon be brought to justice. He will not be arrested for at least a few days, as Government agents are in touch with his movements and should he attempt to leave New York they will cause his arrest. It is said that he has been interested to a wider interest in the Coleman-Keliher-Tibbetts affair than has been revealed in connection with the case.

Never Saw Tibbetts Before.

The government had got the idea that Tibbetts was probably the Charlie Carter who was one of the earlier faro dealers who got his hands on Coleman in New York. They wanted Coleman to take a look at Tibbetts, who had been summoned as a witness in the Keliher trial. Mr. Garland accompanied Coleman into the room where Tibbetts was, and this conversation took place:

Mr. Garland to Coleman: "Do you know this man?"

Before Coleman could answer Coleman and Tibbetts had shaken hands.

MRS. TAYLOR ENGAGED TO COLEMAN WHEN 14

in my life affairs. George W. Coleman and I were children together, were engaged to be married when we were fourteen years of age, and again after I had married, suffered and divorced a husband. We renewed our old time friendships about two years and a half ago. I confess that I have loved him very much and have every reason to believe up to six months ago that my affections was fully reciprocated. I have no absolute surety that he does not love me still, but the time for love making is passed in his case and mine. The poor boy has been sentenced for a long term and I have only sad fairly made up my mind that I have got to suffer the lighter burden resting upon me, yes, and stand it almost without flinching, too, for having a few real friends and fewer friends, I have found myself well-nigh deserted by those who were glad to associate with me when things were brighter and different.

Were Chums at School.

We were nearly of the same age, George and I, and we were at the Webster Grammar School together through the grades, making sheeps' eyes through our fingers from the very first. I can see now that George W. Coleman was a manly little fellow. So many things crop up in memory at this time nothing to do but, though I did not, of course, appreciate it with my child-mind at the time. For instance, he protected me when we were about fourteen, went at it with characteristic confidence and straightforwardness. I cannot remember that he was bashful in telling me. It is my recollection that he sort of took possession, as though it were his right.

"We will get married, you and I, for you are my very best girl," he repeated many times. When we were tiny mites together at school I received his ruddy and shy smiles. Sometimes for a day he would have another girl, but I recall that it was only in pique or mischief, for he always came back to me and we trudged along side by side as much as child-modesty on one side and assumed carelessness of the other would permit.

Oh, it was the same old story of school-child love. Most of us have experienced it. The mere mention of it is sufficient. Scarcely a boy or girl beyond the age of ten or twelve years but has gone through the same ecstasy and in later life held tender memories.

Proposed at Age of 14.

When at the age of fourteen George proposed that I should marry him, and when it was settled, but to me it looked a long, long way off. I was older than George by a few months, and you know that a girl grows up when a boy of her age. She cannot see herself in quite the same light as several years older, else she cannot properly look up to him and feel a right sense of serious respect. She cannot clothe with dignity that which is young as herself.

It was somewhat so in our case. I felt older than George. Besides, I left school after completing the ninth grade, and that separated us. Then I settled apart, to rejoin each other years later.

At the age of fourteen I went to learn the millinery trade. My father suggested to me in good stead, and which, I presume, will be my future occupation. I fancy that I got along very well as a milliner's apprentice, and in three years felt myself very capable and probably was; at least, my employers told me so.

Married When Seventeen.

Then I married. It is useless to ask a girl why she married at the age of seventeen. Few of them know or can give a definite reason. George and I had kept in touch and were friendly enough, loving, as boy and girl sweethearts, but drifted very well as a milliner, I encountered an older man, who seemed to me the embodiment of all that was ideal husband. So I just married him, temporarily forgot George W. Coleman, imagined he had never been old enough to take seriously, was dazzled by the prospect of a new sort of life, being domestic enough by nature, and so I embraced the new field of endeavor as a married husband and supposed for the time that I had found my life work. I did not at all that the city had held dear. I awoke a short time afterward, as many young girls do, who plunge into matrimony without knowing their own mind.

Yes, and when I awoke and disentangled myself good and George Coleman was waiting, he moved by love, as eager to make me as when we pulled our troth in school days and waited hand in hand choking with delight in affection. The so-called "calf love" had remained with both of us and the world again looked bright.

Now, the real reason in the world why George and I did not marry after I obtained my divorce. I had lived out of my confidence for six years, returning occasionally to visit my relatives, and was along twenty-three years of age when George Coleman and I renewed our love affair. He could hardly wait for my divorce to be granted and talked of immediate marriage. It is hard to say just why we did not marry, for I returned his love fervently than ever in the old schoolhood years. Yes, I loved him with all my heart, and this late great trouble, with our separation, which just preceded it, have almost broken my heart. I could scarcely have believed myself capable of so deep affection. But I have returned to Georgie in the last few years and a half.

I suppose the actual reason we did not marry was because I had for six years passed through a matrimonial experience that left its blight and which instilled me with more than natural caution. We loved sufficiently, but the day for the marriage did not seem to arrive. Instinctively it was put from us, and toward the last we seemed to speak of it much, especially when the greenered monster began to pile his vocation.

When I used to visit Cambridge during my married years I met George from time to time. We would chat pleasantly, make very little reference to old times and never become distinctly personal or inquisitive. A sort of reserve very naturally stood between us, but always I noticed that look of reproach in his eyes while conversationally we would sort of veil around the bush.

Well I remember how happy he was when I returned to Cambridge for good and it became known that I was about to receive my divorce. He just couldn't wait. The time didn't pass half fast enough until the decree should be granted. And there was nothing to do but we must become married right off—but we waited. A burnt child dreads the fire. I was in no hurry. Freedom seemed a beauteous thing, and there we were, lovey and dovey, as in the old days at the grammar school.

My divorce was obtained in New York State. Friday, was it? I cannot recall. I speak of Friday because the day was George W. Coleman's choice. He always said it. Everything evil or unfortunate befell him on Friday. He had a horror of the day.

I was married on Friday. I am not sure but that George's birthday was Friday, the 13th of February. Anyway, he said he would never do another thing on Friday if it were avoidably done. Sometimes I shared his superstition.

I moved back to Cambridge and took up my home in the house with my married sister and have lived there ever since. Much of the furniture I brought along from housekeeping days and some of it I bought afterward. I worked as a milliner in different stores in season, made my own hats and clothes—for I am a very good dressmaker—and I did dressmaking for others. George insisted on helping me to and, as I stated to the court, gave me, I should think, about $30 a week. This money, with what I earned with what I saved by making my own things, left me very comfortably situated.

During the two years and a half since my return from New York George has made me presents, and I have given him little ones on his birthday and on Christmas. Sometimes I have done without things myself to enable me to remember him properly. My presents to George were insignificant as to cost, but they pleased him so that he has often complimented me on ingenuity in selecting them. He often said I was somehow able to hit upon the very things he needed. This, as you might know, pleased and encouraged me very much.

Speaking of presents reminds me of Miss Hightower's efforts to straighten out a misunderstanding which I had with her. It only it has, I believe, appeared in print. We met on the street and she invited me to the Colonial theatre to hear Miss Arnold, of who gave George Coleman certain things. It was unnecessary and all that, but I wouldn't allow anybody to think I was afraid, so I called and very pleasantly identified the things as having been given by me to George, which she confessed was the impression she had received at the bank. Were it not so pathetic, it would have been amusing. It was an interesting situation.

But to return to my story. I have lived in the house shared with my married sister, she is on the first and I on the second floor, since. I have had to Cambridge two years and a half ago, excepting little vacations and the weeks put in at the shore. I have been in business many with George Coleman, but in no hurry to marry and its myself down for the second time, because of my former experience. But the understanding was that we should ultimately marry.

Said He Earned $35.

George told me he was earning $35 a week in the bank. I believed it, for he lived like a man earning about that income. I never felt that I was robbing him in the least to accept a portion of my support. However, it seemed to be all in the family, as it were, and I never questioned in my own mind the amount of money he received by him. It looked entirely natural.

Yes, and we were turtle doves to each other up to about six months ago. Then I began to hear rumors that George was paying attention to another woman, a girl over in Boston, they said. I wouldn't undertake to say the name, because I was never sure. But I heard enough to cause me first uneasiness and then actual suffering. Finally I did not care to trust it with it for a long time. I couldn't believe it; didn't want to believe it. But it was forced upon me until I had to take notice, and I mentioned it.

"George," I said, "I keep hearing rumors that you are giving time and attention to one or more women in Boston. I hear things about them not at all flattering. I don't want you to feel that I am jealous of such as they, but I really do feel very badly. Now I don't believe you act as they say you do and don't wish to credit the rumors for a moment, but won't you promise me that you will carry yourself in the future in a way to give people no chance of speaking against your character?"

He promised solemnly that he would. He said there was nothing much in the reports, but he would be careful not to meet the girl. Then he kissed me over and over and satisfied my mind and all was sunshine again for a time.

But I kept hearing more. He knew that I did. A little coolness sprang up between us that neither of us tried to explain away. It went from bad to worse until we did not speak to each other. We talked over the telephone. He would call me up at the house and we would chat, but we were both too proud to humble ourselves to the other. It is the same old story of lovers. Frequently it is very foolish. Quite often it is the beginning of a final estrangement. It was so in my case. We parted. For a time I could scarcely hear it. I cried until I was unfit for anything. Then I braced myself. At about this time the trouble came.

Lunch Before His Flight.

It was three days before George left for the West that he called on the phone and asked me to join him at lunch in the restaurant near the bank. I did so. We talked about everything except the matter that weighed so heavily upon me. With what might perhaps be termed false pride we overlooked that—the real subject next my heart. It was a good-natured meeting. I for one put aside all bitterness, and we just had an enjoyable lunch and talk. I never saw George Coleman again until the street had taken place.

I was down in New York on a business and shopping trip when the news came that the National City Bank had closed its doors. The newspapers exploited Coleman's connection. If I had been pierced by a knife blade the shock would not have been greater. I hid myself in the hotel, denied myself to visitors, and I waited. It was all too true. Then I returned to Cambridge. I was in a daze for days and weeks. Day after day I sat and cried in my little flat and refused to answer the ring of the telephone or go to the door when my bell rang.

My good sister would afterward tell me who called and what they wanted. They came to inquire for me. I would never see them. Many times I pretended to be out of town or away from home rather than to face anybody. I preferred to remain alone with my trouble. The good Lord knows it was enough. I have suffered physically and mentally as I hope never to suffer again.

George Coleman has suffered more and will be a long time satisfying justice. I wish him every little bit of luck that can possibly come his way. I have only kindest feelings and hope with love of my childhood sweetheart. He was in error and he was misled, and he has returned to pay the penalty.

George Coleman is still to me the best boy that ever lived.

GIRL PRAISES COLEMAN

George Coleman is a good boy, in spite of what he has done. There is no criminal intent in his nature, whatever acts may be charged against him. Knowing him since childhood, and loving him much of the time as he loved me, I feel very badly about his predicament. Also, I harbor no ill will toward anybody connected with him, not even against those who came between George Coleman and myself.

LOWELL POLICE STOP BIG BASEBALL POOL

Whole Town Captured by Craze That Cost Thousands of Dollars Weekly.

LOWELL, May 28.—Five thousand enthusiastic baseball pool subscribers were disappointed to-night on the corners of Lowell's streets condemning the action of the police in prohibiting them from further playing the game which has gripped almost every man and boy of the city and in which thousands of dollars were spent weekly.

To-night the last pools of the season are distributed, and those who are "behind the game" are angry at the thought that they will have no chance to win back what they have been caught in the clutches of Police Welch, acting upon complaints from mothers who say their boys have been spending all their money in the gamble. To-day ordered the police to arrest anyone engaging in the game.

The craze for the pool in Lowell had reached such proportions that to-night one pool of $500 and another of $300 was given out. Besides these are hundreds of smaller ones, the promoters of all doing a prosperous business.

The base ball pool craze started with the opening of the league season, the prize of which was each week $500, each man who took a chance paid $1. For the season's pool a box, each pill represented one of the teams in the American or National leagues. The one made by the team which he first drew was credited to him on the last day of the week. If he watched the fortunes of a different team each day of the week, or the last day of the week the scores made by the six teams, one of which he played each day of the week, were added and if the total was greater than any other combination he won.

The pool maker had a fine set of books to keep. By the 5000 pool, which was a fifty-cent affair, next thou had over one thousand men in the city to look after. By each pool maker made fifteen per cent. The man who ran the $500 pool thus had a weekly income of $75.

Webster Mill Is Burned.

WEBSTER, May 28.—The mill of the Perry Woolen Company was burned early this morning and the loss is about $10,000. The destruction of cloth was complete. About 1000 employes will be without work for a number of weeks.

BOSTON BOOMED FOR NEXT ELKS' MEETING

Members of No. 10 Lodge Going to Detroit to Bring Back Reunion in 1911.

"On to Boston in 1911" will be the slogan of Boston Lodge of Elks at Detroit at the grand lodge session and annual reunion, July 9 to 16. The New England members of the order are determined that the next session of the grand lodge will be held here and are going on to Detroit ready to make a contest with any city in the country for the honor of entertaining the grand lodge.

The committee in charge of the excursion of Boston lodge, Michael J. Murray, chairman; Edward J. Hayden, Edward J. Steptoe, Thomas D. Kiely and Joseph Lee, are formulating plans to give the members that make the trip the time of their lives. Already over 600 have signified their intention of making the trip.

Boston Lodge, No. 10, a winner of prizes in two Labor Day parades in Philadelphia, are prepared to bring back another from Detroit. The lodge will have a big feature in the Detroit parade. They will depict the landing of New England, from the Indian and Puritan days to the present time. Every member will have a badge and plenty to give away in order that the Elks may know where Boston is.

A splendid start in the right direction has been arranged. Leaving Saturday, July 9, a special train will be run to Detroit. Special, the trip will be via Niagara Falls, arriving July 11 in time for the parade. On July 14, the party will return via Toronto, Montreal and Quebec, reaching St. Lawrence and Montreal. An optional excursion has also been planned for Quebec. The train will be one of the finest Pullmans that this ever left South Station.

Saturday, July 9, Boston Lodge will parade from the Elks' home to the station with a band, the ladies of the party following in autos.

BIG MINNEAPOLIS FIRE.

Help Summoned From St. Paul; Loss $1,750,000.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., May 28.—A $1,750,000 fire destroyed six large factories in South Minneapolis early to-day. A large district was threatened and saved only by the arrival of additional fire fighting apparatus from St. Paul, following an appeal for aid. The oldest hotel in Minneapolis, the Arcadia Hotel, was burned. There were many narrow escapes.

PARKER TAX DODGER, DECLARES MAYOR IN STATEMENT

Fitzgerald Tells Why He Did Not Reappoint Him as Fire Commissioner.

DOCUMENT IS SCATHING

His Honor Also Says Mr. Parker Displayed Bad Judgment In Duties.

MAYOR FITZGERALD yesterday issued a statement saying that the reason he did not reappoint Fire Commissioner Parker was that he dodged taxes and also displayed "absolute judgment" in advocating the removal of the Mason street fire quarters to Park square. The Mayor says:

"A year before he was appointed fire commissioner in Boston he appeared before the assessors and, in order to dodge a proper payment of his taxes to this city, took oath that his legal residence was Milton. Boston loses millions annually by such practices, and I will not knowingly appoint a man of this type to office while I am Mayor of this city."

The condemnation of the former commissioner was called forth by a published statement to the effect that Parker's resignation was a forced one. The Mayor further takes occasion to defend his appointment of Surveyor McCarthy to the position and declare that he still believes that he should properly have been confirmed by the Civil Service Commission. The statement in full follows:

Makes Denial

"I notice an editorial statement to the effect that I forced the resignation of Samuel D. Parker from the position of Fire Commissioner. No suggestion or hint was ever given Mr. Parker that his reappointment was desired. His term of office expired on the first day of May, and I simply exercised my prerogative and named another man for the place, Mr. Jeremiah J. McCarthy, as I did not see fit to reappoint Mr. Parker for two reasons.

"In the first place, he is a tax dodger, and I could not consistently appoint a representative of this unfortunate element of the community to any public office. This class of citizens, who evade their just civic obligations, constitute a menace to good government. A year before he was appointed Fire Commissioner in Boston he appeared before the assessors, and in order to dodge a proper payment of his taxes to this city took oath that his legal residence was Milton. Boston loses millions annually by such practices, and I will not knowingly appoint a man of this type to office while I am Mayor of the city.

"My other reason for not considering his reappointment is the fact that he favored the transfer of the Mason street fire engine house to Park square. It seemed to me that a man with Mr. Parker's knowledge of the operations of the department should have realized at once the absurdity of such an arrangement. He did not, however, and it was the Mayor's office which insisted that a public hearing be given upon the proposition. This was done, the protest was unanimous against the relocation."

Carroll on Job at 1 A. M.

Although it was not until 11 o'clock yesterday that Commissioner Parker turned over the office to his successor, Francis M. Carroll, the latter was on the job at 1 a. m. He was one of the interested onlookers at the Charlestown waterfront fire, the trip costing him about $10 for taxi hire.

Mr. Carroll had been busy answering telephone calls of congratulation until a late hour and had just rolled into bed shortly after midnight, when a man over in Charlestown called him by telephone to tell him a three-alarm fire was on.

He was due at his office on Bristol street at 10 o'clock. He walked in at 9:55. Mr. Parker had preceded him by forty minutes. Record Clerk Tiernay introduced the two men and then the whole force were introduced. Commissioner Carroll was then closeted with Mr. Parker for an hour, after which the latter left.

Commissioner Carroll said: "I have no reforms nor changes to put in operation at once. I feel that Mr. Parker has worked out an excellent system and will make changes only as it becomes apparent that changes can be made for the betterment of the department."

He called Mayor Fitzgerald by telephone and reported that he was on the job.

500 BOYS TO GO CAMPING.

Those Too Poor to Pay Will Go Free of Cost.

About 500 Brookline boys will have a Summer outing at the camp for boys from that town to be established in July or August on an island in Pocasset Harbor, Buzzards Bay, by the Brookline Friendly Society. All boys in the town under sixteen are eligible. Each one will be allowed to stay upon one three weeks at the camp and those who cannot afford to pay board or car fare will have the outing free. Transportation will be paid.

The island is owned by Morris Gray of Brookline and he has loaned it to the society for camp purposes. It is about sixty acres in area and is thickly wooded. The boys will have a chance to play scouting and there will be a well on baseball. They can fish and swim, too. All they will have to do is to keep the camp clean and do all allotted work. Boys who want to join the camp are applying to Arthur W. Worsell in the Union building at High and Warren streets.

FIND WATCH IN STOCKING.

Boston Man Accused of Theft in Worcester.

WORCESTER, May 29.—The police have in custody a man who gives the name of John J. Noonan and says he belongs in Boston. He began work last Monday as a bartender in the saloon and restaurant kept by Jack Slattery, the well-known ball player in the New England League. Noonan was discharged on Wednesday. Soon after he left the chef missed his watch. Suspicion fastened upon Noonan, and he was arrested today. He vigorously denied all knowledge of the watch, but on being searched at police headquarters the timepiece was found in one of his stockings.

IMPORTANCE OF ALFONSO.

His Death Means End of His House in Spain.

LONDON, May 28.—It was remarked at King Edward's funeral that King Alfonso of Spain looked very ill, and according to the Madrid correspondent of the Daily News his appearance did not belie his condition, which is causing considerable anxiety to court officials.

It behooves his advisors, adds the correspondents, to nurse the King's strength as much as possible and to prevent him from overdoing polo, hunting and other exaggerated sports, for his death would mean the end of his house and throne in Spain. The people would not stand another long regency and Queen Victoria is not Queen Christina.

BASEBALL ON SUNDAY FOR AMATEURS IS UP TO COURTS

Boys May Play if Judges Rule That the Game Constitutes a Public Entertainment.

If the courts of Massachusetts decide that a baseball game is a public entertainment, Boston can enjoy Sunday baseball in its search contest. Even in the face of the action of the Legislature in defeating a measure which had for its chief purpose the wiping out of the Bos ton laws which makes playing baseball on Sunday a misdemeanor, a majority of the citizens of Boston say that Sunday baseball can be played in Boston.

But they hasten to add that this would be impossible unless the courts had ruled that the baseball game may be considered a public entertainment in keeping with the character of the Lord's Day.

Mayor Fitzgerald would like to see Sunday amateur baseball permitted in Boston. He has come out flatly in its favor and says that had the opportunity been his he would have made a strong fight for it. Some time there may be an opportunity of effecting favorable legislation.

Here's the Law On It.

The law under which Sunday baseball is prohibited reads:

"Whoever on the Lord's day is present at a game, sport, play or public entertainment, except a concert or other musical entertainment duly licensed, or horse-race provided, shall be fined not less than $5 nor more than ten dollars for each offense."

Under the law such entertainments may be licensed, says:

"The mayor and aldermen of a town, upon written application, may grant licenses for entertainment, any game thereon to be held on the Lord's day, provided, however, that no such license shall be granted to take effect before 1 o'clock in the afternoon for unless the entertainment shall be approved in writing by the chief of the district police.

Sunday baseball is now being played on the vacant lots in Boston. Not by unlicensed teams, it is true, but by youths and informal gatherings.

The attorneys point out that were a baseball game to be considered a public entertainment it would be subject to no control and interfered with by no police.

Fears of the Police.

But they express doubt that the chief of the district police would not be satisfied to the extent that he would consider it a menace from the construction that in the past has been placed upon the law.

Mayor Fitzgerald wants to see the amateurs have a chance to play baseball in Boston parks on Sundays. But he doesn't expect any early action in the matter. In discussing the question, he says:

"I favor Sunday baseball. I think that the majority of Boston's taxpayers hold the same views. But the Legislature has plainly showed that it is not ready to give this enjoyment to young people.

"If I keep my position I intend to make a move to the matter when legislation next is being considered. I may say that I am very glad to have issued a license by construing the law to mean that it was for a public entertainment. Then the color of the State police could have refused to sign the license and we could have made a test case to get a decided what public opinion was on the matter.

Too Late for a Test.

"But it is too late now to test the law. No legislation could be enacted in this little time. It would seem now but a crude attempt of evasion of the law and would gain the friends of the movement only a little.

"I played baseball from fifth class (A) to college myself, and I was an enthusiast. I could never see where it did any harm. I am sure that the majority of the boys were, like myself, supposed to attend Sunday school. I think that baseball on Sunday was one of the greatest joys of young boys. Long Island and Apple Island. We were willing to walk in an open lot and be content to get up a game. Many times I, myself, walked from Dorchester to

Completely at the Mercy of Young Heir, Declares Lawyer Who Studied Case.

JUST BET ON LONG LIFE

Purchaser Can't Even Say: "You Must Be Careful of Your Health, Sir."

STEPHEN H. BOOKS, lawyer, sailed away from the office of Referee in Bankruptcy Special Master in Bankruptcy, at 10 o'clock yesterday morning and, dressed in a sleek frock coat, a $1.75 cravat and a pleased look, he was the well-known personage of the operations of Franklin Fay.

This remarkable business of an insolvent estate is now consummated, and on the Knox records the name of Fay ceases to exist as a party to any litigation and as an owner of property.

Fay has been adjudged a bankrupt and Books, acting as referee, has appointed himself master in bankruptcy, and has ordered the property sold.

Books has also ordered that the bankrupt be discharged from his debts, and Fay, who has been living in a $50-a-month flat, will possibly not be able to afford even that.

Fay's creditors will receive about 10 cents on the dollar, and Fay will be free to begin life anew.

Books has also ordered that Fay

LEAGUE OF LOVE IS THE NEWEST UPLIFT

Cambridge Woman Starts Society to Patch Broken Hearts and Stop Divorces.

ARE your wedding bells out of tune? Is Mrs. Henpecko on the job? Has your sweetheart given you the icy mitt? Are you thinking of the divorce court, or a breach of promise suit?

If so, you are a fit subject for "The League of Love in Life." The league is organized to attend to just such cases as yours. Not only that, but any little, unpleasantness where Dan Cupid plays the role of disturber is the very thing the league genius desires to tackle.

Briefly, the purpose of the League of Love in Life is this:

Something New in Boston.

"To smooth out the tangled web of domestic happiness; to soothe parted lovers; to insure their future lives together; to do all we can in every way we can to boost the love life, so to add, by the labors we individually contribute, to the sum total of happiness in the world."

The league is the outcome of a serious movement, started by Mrs. Etta Willard of No. 7 Allen street, Cambridge. It is something new in Boston, but someth. good, Mrs. Willard's adherents declare. The love boost comes after serious consideration of social problems of America by Mrs. Willard, who thinks it is about time somebody got busy to stem the increasing tide of divorce seekers.

It is not the first time that Mrs. Willard has come forward with an opportune suggestion. She has been prominent throughout Boston's milk strike, having attended all the hearings before the legislative committee at the State House, and otherwise showing her interest in the milk situation. Several weeks ago, she appeared as the only woman in attendance at the mass meeting of milk producers in Faneuil Hall.

"The work of the league will not be confined by sundered love of any particular kind, but we will try to smooth the path leading to a return of affection to parted hearts, whether they be married or single," said Mrs. Willard. "Quarrelling will be one of our watchwords, but love in life is the keynote of the league. Husbands will be reconciled to their wives and wives to their husbands; the suitor who sorrows for broken troth will be reconciled to his sweetheart, if possible.

Nation to Be Benefited.

"While just starting, the idea is capable of being worked out into a grand scheme that will weld together the women of the entire nation. When a permanent organization is effected, the members will individually choose from their ranks committees of one to attend to all cases they hear of in their neighborhood that have been brought about by blighted affection.

"Besides, individual leagues will be committees to take up special cases. These do not need to be made a matter of attention, but as soon as we hear of any case that needs our help in this kind the members in their locality will see to it that the parties are seen and that their best sides can be heard. A meeting can be arranged and through love there can then soon sympathies between a couple, and in this arrangement will end and happiness ensue.

"There is no reason why the league should not be a success. Something of the kind is needed. The more one reads the papers, which are flooded more than ever with matter of which is in almost every instance fatal to domestic happiness, the more one becomes convinced some work must be done to stop it."

Stop the Divorce Cases.

"Be a booster. Help to make Boston a loveable city. Thus a good idea can be brought to the attention of the world. Let those bent on rushing into divorce courts stop and consider that they may be doing wrong and that after all, if rightly understood, love is the greatest thing on earth."

So, if you want to be a stenographer of Cupid, or a love restorer, join the league.

WORK HORSES ON PARADE TOMORROW

Eighth Annual Parade Will Bring Out Best Draught Animals in Boston.

Fourteen hundred work horses will march tomorrow in the eighth annual parade of the Boston Work Horse Parade Association, the largest number since this exhibition became a feature of Memorial Day.

Before the parade, the horses will be driven up in the judges' stand on Commonwealth avenue and Bay State Road from Massachusetts avenue to Exeter street, a distance of one mile and a quarter. There will be a minute four judges, and it will take several hours to make the awards. The inspection will begin at 8 a. m.

The parade itself will start at 10:30 o'clock, moving along Commonwealth avenue. The reviewing stand will be near the starting point. Admission will be by ticket.

Thirty Eight Classes on View.

Thirty-eight classes will be represented, including commercial and municipal department horses. Five auto trucks horses, as well as United States mail carriers, will be shown.

A love feature of the competition is the class for "reconstructed" horses. This contains eight entries, one of which is Blind Tom, a horse which a Boston woman saw fall in the street, get up after it was overtown, and immediately purchased. Blind Tom's experience in the hands of the famous imaginary Black Beauty.

Blind Tom's owner has gathered to congratulate the Congressman, who came home from Washington on the crowded afternoon train plan at Moraine Farm, the Phillips' summer place in North Beverly. Friday Congressman Peters was visiting his brother-in-law at her summer home. When the train pulled in Friday and Mrs. Beverly yesterday he was congratulated by the whole Phillips family.

Miss Phillips is a sister of former Assistant Secretary of the Navy Joseph Lee of this city, who is at present secretary of the American mission class, where the horses are cared for by the drivers.

There will also be prizes for veteran drivers and well kept stables. One of the interesting classes is that for mules, in which Uncle Sam's mules will be shown by exhibitors.

Almost fifty horses, otherwise eligible, have been excluded this year because the officials left that the owners of these horses did not give all their animals the same care.

Following are the officials of the parade: Chief marshal, Joshua Atwood, Jr.; aids, Francis Peabody, Jr., Arthur Perkins, Francis Peabody, John H. Jewett, William D. Quimby, Charles L. Burrill, Harry M. Soule, Albert B. Lewis, James F. Brooks, John F. Waters, William W. Warkin, Norton Wigglesworth, Lyman O. Stoneleigh; orders, Robert J. Taylor, J. F. Whitney, H. A. Bossardt; veterinary, Dr. Frank J. Sullivan.

TELLS OF BURIED CITIES.

Dr. Tozzer of Harvard Home After South American Discoveries.

Four ancient cities were unearthed from matted vegetation in the dense interior of South America, by Dr. A. M. Tozzer, instructor in Anthropology at Harvard University. Dr. Tozzer has just returned to Boston, on the 62 foot sloop Siren, after his six months' visit to British Honduras and Guatemala. During this time he has talked of his work of research in the ancient interior of South America. Indian guides led him to the sites of the long forgotten cities of another civilization. He found arrow heads, antique art work, picture-writings, pottery and hieroglyphics of sacred character.

Dr. Tozzer who was accompanied on his trip by R. E. Merwin, a Harvard assistant, secured a large and valuable collection for the Harvard Museum.

PROF. E. H. WARREN WEDS.

Baltimore Girl Bride of Member of Harvard Law Faculty.

BALTIMORE, May 28.—Professor Edward H. Warren of the Harvard Law School and Miss Elinor Foster, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Foster, were married at noon to-day in Northminster Presbyterian Church. Miss Dessa Clement of Philadelphia was maid of honor, and the bridesmaids were Miss Anne Bowen Smith, Miss Hofelower, Miss Alice Hunting and Miss Ella Rinehart of Baltimore. Philip A. Warren, brother of the bridegroom, was best man, and the ushers were Albert F. Bigelow of Brookline, Winfred T. Denison of Washington, Frederick Foster of Boston, Lester Foster of Baltimore, Henry James, Jr., of Cambridge, Dr. Harris Kennedy of Readville, Lewis I. BRISTOW DRAPERS IN PRODIGAL ROLE

Governor's Son, Actress Wife and Child to Be Welcomed Back to Hopedale.

Bristow Draper is going back to Hopedale to live. With him, of course, come his young wife, formerly Queenie Sanford, the actress, and their baby boy. Whether both did so much to heal the breach between Bristow Draper and his father, Governor Draper,

The Bristow Drapers will occupy the David Wescott house on Adin street, adjoining the big mansion in which Governor lives when in Hopedale. Governor Draper bought the Wescott house last Winter after the death of Mrs. Wescott. The house has been vacant since then. The purchase by the Governor was kept quiet at the time. In the light of present developments it is assumed that he had begun to plan for a home-coming for his son, his daughter-in-law and his grandchild.

Bristow has been working for three years in the Queen City Cotton Mills, at Burlington, Vt. He went there after his marriage to Queenie Sanford in March, 1907, which caused an estrangement between him and his father.

In April, 1909, Governor and Mrs. Draper went to Burlington and visited their son and his little daughter. A reconciliation was effected, but young Draper continued to work in the mills. It was said at the time that he would not return to Hopedale. That difficulty, it is believed, is now removed, by present developments.

The son and family will come to Hopedale in July or August. It is believed that Bristow will be given a responsible place in the mills of the Draper Company. Eventually he may succeed to the "mill" in that corporation which his father and uncle, Ebenezer Draper of Hartford that this home-coming of Bristow is one of the happiest and sunniest events in the Governor's life.

URGE CARE OF BABIES IN PULPITS TODAY

Pastors Yield to Appeal to Aid Campaign of Hygiene Association.

In twenty-two churches to-day the preachers will discuss the great question of infant mortality. The churches have been asked to take the matter up as an educational measure by the Milk and Baby Hygiene Association. The ministers will impress upon the mothers in their congregations the necessity of taking special care of their babies in hot weather. Walter E. Kruesi, director of the Hygiene Association, has sent out data for use in these discussions.

Babies feel heat more than grown people and most babies are overdressed, says Mr. Kruesi. "Babies should have fresh air all the time in summer and their feeding should be regular.

"Cows' milk should be bought fresh in bottles and kept until used, well cooked and kept cold. If the mother does not know how to modify it according to the baby's age and condition she should take the baby to a 'baby station' or milk modification stations. There is a graduate nurse at each station who will gladly instruct her. The stations are at various well-known settlements and in the public schools. The addresses are:

Division 11 Brooke, No. 3 State street, is treasurer of the Babies Milk Station Association. Contributions receive and acknowledge any donation.

ENGAGEMENT LUNCHEON.

Fete in Honor of Congressman Peters and Fiancee.

Mrs. John C. Phillips yesterday gave a luncheon in honor of Congressman Andrew J. Peters and her daughter, Miss Martha, whose engagement is just announced.

Many party of former guests to congratulate the Congressman, who came home from Washington on the crowded afternoon train plan at Moraine Farm, the Phillips' summer place in North Beverly. Friday Congressman Peters was visiting his brother-in-law at her summer home. When the train pulled in Friday and Mrs. Beverly yesterday he was congratulated by the whole Phillips family.

LEAVE FOR PITTSBURG.

Boston Loses Services of Expert Workers for the Blind.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. P. Campbell will start to-day for Pittsburg, where Mr. Campbell will become secretary of the Western Pennsylvania Commission for the Blind to accept which he has just resigned Similar duties in this city and Massachusetts. Mrs. Campbell is the son of Sir Francis Campbell, a prominent philanthropist, and co-worker with the late Dr. Samuel Gridley Howe, founder of Perkins Ward Howe. Francis Campbell's work for the blind in England obtained for him knighthood by King Edward.

GEN. BATCHELDER IS LATE.

U. S. Officials Fear for the Safety —Coast Is Fogbound.

The United States Quartermaster's boat, General R. N. Batchelder, due in Boston Monday night or Tuesday morning, and not yet reported, is the cause of much anxiety. Among army officers here the officials fear for her safety. She left Pensacola April 14. Other vessels which crept into Boston yesterday were in many instances twenty-four hours behind time.

The report that a heavy fog hangs over the traffic currents of the coast from the Newfoundland Banks to the Delaware Capes. The Norwegian steamer Chilmark arrived in Boston harbor yesterday from Louisburg, C. B., twenty-four hours overdue.

$140,000 LUMBER FIRE.

Spark From Tramp's Pipe Blamed for Charlestown Blaze.

Three million feet of lumber were consumed by fire when the plant of the Export Lumber Company and the Atlantic Coast Lumber Company at Mystic River, Charlestown, were destroyed yesterday morning. The damage is placed at $140,000. The fire is believed to have been caused by a spark from the pipe of a tramp. In addition to the great piles of lumber, two sheds, an office building, five freight cars and two horses were burned.

PARKER LIKENED UNTO ROOSEVELT

Dr. Crothers Thinks ex-President Might Have Driven "Undesirables" from Church.

Rev. Dr. S. M. Crothers told the members of the Fredrick Century Club yesterday afternoon that a man was born in Kentucky to see every one often in a landing boat, speaking on the Life of the Rev. Theodore Parker," the noted Unitarian divine, who died forty years ago.

"Parker and Roosevelt are alike in the individuality and fearlessness," Crothers declared. "Parker, although called the Robert Burns of preachers, was a man of common sense and humility. Like Burns, Parker was a student of men and books, not approving of his self-righteousness, but of his sincere desire to help.

"Like Roy Theodore Parker stands today, after reading his history, as one of a great family, a descendant of the regulated order of men who did not command their fellowmen to be righteous, but who were working just as hard for righteousness and truth as himself. If he were living today, I am convinced that he would be more tolerant, not only to sinners but to those who differ from him in opinion. Such men as he finds it necessary to get into the pulpit in order to do their work. God needs such men to do the work of the world. Such men were Rev. Roy Theodore Parker and others of his time. They were in the work of the ministry to get what they would have denied them in any other field of work. They found their mood of their younger.

"Among the men who Rabbi M. M. Elchberg of the United Hebrew Congregation, Archbishop Williams, president of the Museum of Fine Arts, and Robert I. Rhodes, Joseph Lee, editor of the Country Magazine.

HARVARD CHINAMAN WINS ENGLISH PRIZE

David Yok-kang Yui of Wuchang, China, has the distinction of being the first Chinese student in Harvard to win a prize for writing English. He has just been notified that he has been awarded a prize of $200 for dissertations in English. The subject of his essay is "The Schools of Old China."

Mr. Yui has specialized in writing and reading a study of the American system of education in order to return to China to enter the Government Bureau of Education, where research is extremely interesting and vitally important to the school system of the Oriental empire.

Praised by Professors.

His essay was one of the longest written and the Chinese student has been praised by professors and instructors in all parts of the university for his brilliant work in English. He is the first Chinese student, if they go to school at the age of four years a child is often put to work, and from that time on he is given for example, a dozen characters, which means that he is engaged in a work, difficult and arduous. By the time he graduates there is no alphabet like the English alphabet to learn, but there are 214 radicals, or root words, which are the foundation of thousands of Chinese words.

"The Chinese children are never taught the meaning of words. This method is called the 'word' method. Characters are learned by rote and quiet and a child four years old is frequently taught to read and recite reciting in this way, usually made to explain the meaning of any words, except those which are the names of birds and flowers. Instead of learning to recognize and pronounce correctly is all that is required. No blackboards or charts are in use in the Chinese schools.

Different Courts for Girls.

"When the child progresses sufficiently books are used. The character of the books is influenced by the sex of the pupil and respective countries. In China, Girls are taught what is known as the 'girls' classics.'

"It is written in rhythmical form, with the characters arranged in such line. No boys ever study this book. It deals with home life and domestic science.

"The books that are generally taught to boys are known as the 'Four Books,' and contain the Confucian philosophical and historical words and are more difficult to learn.

Teachers in general get $150 a year and are kept busy starting the gifts from the pupils' parents. The punishments inflicted on the pupils are anything but severe. For failure to recite the lesson the boy is made to kneel on a low stool, or kneel on the ground. Knuckles rapped with a ruler is one of the forms of punishment are common. The eyelids are pinched, causing a little to reading. For insubordination or for fighting the pupil is held across several stools, flat on his back, and beaten by the master with a bamboo pole four feet long.

MAN AND WIFE ABLAZE.

Turpentine Over a Floor Starts Fire at Haverhill.

HAVERHILL, May 28.—A spring lock, turpentine, bees wax and a kitchen fire nearly resulted in two fatalities to-day, but the blaze was put out in the home of Christopher C. Cook in the Bedford district, and his wife and remarkable escapes from being badly burned. Mr. Cook was using floor paint with turpentine over the stove. The fluid ignited and Mr. Cook's clothing caught fire. He rushed to the kitchen door, throwing the burning fluid in all directions as he fled. He opened the door and the wind shut it with a bang while his wife's clothing caught fire and she was burned about the head and arms. Finally a window was broken and Mrs. Cook was carried to the road and the flames were extinguished.

MAYOR ON A ZOO TRIP.

Will Leave Tuesday to Get Tips From Detroit Gardens.

Mayor Fitzgerald and City Engineer Jackson will leave for Washington Tuesday to take up with the war authorities the matter of rebuilding the South Chelsea bridge. The Mayor frequently wants a new bridge to cost $1,500,000 to replace the present structure. The Mayor is in hopes of getting the War Department to agree to a temporary structure that will serve for ten years and cost $125,000.

When the Washington work is accomplished, the officials will visit Detroit to gather information on the matter of a zoo and the animals for which will be started right away out of the income from the Franklin Park.

Memorial Day at Milton.

MILTON, May 28.—The local G. A. R. Post will observe Memorial Day by decorating 200 graves in the Milton and Quincy cemeteries and by attending the presentation of a flag to the town of Quincy by Mrs. John H. Emerson, the gift being in memory of her husband, who was a member of Huntington Frothingham Wolcott Post 102. The flag will be raised in [illegible] Milton square.

BOY SCOUT PATROLS STARTED IN TOWNS

Boy scouts with field gun in drill.

NOT only is the interest of the keenest in Boston proper in the success of the American Boy Scout movement, but during this past week the idea has spread to the surrounding cities and towns, with the result that more is going to be done than ever before. Plans afoot to start patrols of scouts in at least a dozen places. Since the movement was first inaugurated in Boston, some months ago, new and how little interest or actual interest in the ultimate organization of the scout patrols.

The amount of consideration given the plan has been all the greater from the fact that the school days are rapidly drawing to a close, and there is a general opinion that the time is most propitious now to start the scouts in Boston, so as to be on the scout idea to enrolled out in the fall, taking advantage the Mr. boys' vacations coming, a fact which has been proved in the experience of N. C. A. camps and military organization camps in past seasons.

To Grade Boy Scouts.

The latest suggestion by men interested in boys' work is to organize the scouts into grades, those providing for the ages of different ages. Those their own work men like Boys Secretary Edward H. Keeley of the Y. M. C. A., and others have found out that boys can be trained to better advantage when the smaller boys are segregated from the older ones.

In picking the Silver Fox scouts, the idea is to choose the older boys, who qualified for the work. Other boys will be enrolled in the Bear patrol, and when up to the standard, and no lapse will be made in the work of the Silver Foxes, the younger boys will be promoted.

The idea of the State secretary, Boys, H. W. Gibson of the Y. M. C. A., that there is a compelling among grades to become scouts is also favorable as regard. Secretary Gibson in his way

At.. $9.00 Each

When you see these beautiful Silk Dresses at $9.00 you will exclaim WONDERFUL!!!

1228 Beautiful Silk Dresses

Both street and evening costumes. Not a dress in the lot worth less than $15.00, and most of them are $20.00 and $25.00 Dresses.

BUT!!!--- On Tuesday Morning, May 31st, at 10 A. M., these elegant silk dresses will be offered at $9.00

THINK OF IT!!!—The silk alone in these dresses cost more than we sell them for all ready to wear. Never have we seen such values before! The styles are the newest and wonderfully pretty.

THE REASON we can sell these lovely silk dresses for women AT ALMOST NOTHING is this—a manufacturer whose business had been paralyzed by the late, cold spring weather. He realized his predicament and his anxiety to close out the entire 1228 dresses [illegible] offer was large enough to handle the whole lot. We made a RIDICULOUSLY LOW OFFER, but it was finally accepted, and these 1228 silk dresses at $9.00 will [illegible]

On Sale Tuesday Morning, May 31, at 10 A. M.

WORLD CHAMPIONSHIP GOLF FOUGHT THIS WEEK

Only One American to Do Battle for the Prize Across the Ocean.

EASY WEEK FOR BOSTON

Irish, State and United States Championships To-reys Contested Here.

Golf, the great national game of Great Britain, will be the chief sport of interest to the sporting world this week, as the championship of the world will be fought out on the links of the Royal St. George's Golf Club at Sandwich, Kent, England, on Thursday, Friday and Saturday of this week. The championship will be played for by the best golfers of the United Kingdom, and one American, Alex Smith, who is now in England, will also be in the contest. Smith is the only American who has ever won the championship, and he has held it for two years. He won it in 1906 at Myopia and in 1907 at Ardsley. Alex Ross of Brae Burn was also entered, but he was prevented from going by business affairs. Smith and the rest of the "old guard" have got to be playing the best they know how and have a little luck with them at the same time, in order to win a championship.

A very large field turned out at Brae Burn yesterday for the qualification round for the Spring handicap cup. The first sixteen net scores will qualify for the first cup and the other players will be placed in division according to their scores. R. Angus captured the low score prize with a card of 79, while Dr. Burk was a close second with one stroke more. Low net in the second division was won by Quinby with a remarkable low net score of 80.

The pairings for the match play which starts the first week in June will be announced later. The summary:

Quincy, 6, Copelands, 1.

At Quincy the Quincy team of the Old Colony League beat the Copelands of the Norfolk County League 6 to 1. The score:

Batteries—Atwood and Murray; Donovan and F. Duggan.

The extraordinary attraction of a good Nemo Corset for $1.00 will doubtless induce the usual Monday throng of shoppers to do their corset-buying on Tuesday. Remember the date—TUESDAY, MAY 31.

Nemo

"June Special"

Of Fine Batiste Light and Cool $1.00

SALE BEGINS Tuesday, May 31

Only twice a year—in January and June—can you buy a Nemo Corset for $1.00. Women watch for these Nemo Specials, because they know that a $1.00 Nemo is as carefully made as any other Nemo, and that it is ALL QUALITY -no "frills" to make it look worth more: a genuine $2 value for $1.00.

This year's "June Special" is of fine white "Nemo Batiste"—light and cool, but strong and well wearing.

A stylish model, that will suit all average figures. Medium bust, long skirt, the new Nemo crossed hose supporters.

Be An "Early Bird!"

These June Sales are usually over in a day—women know that it's the only time they can get such corsets for $1.00.

On sale Tuesday morning, May 31, in the principal stores of this city -a limited number, but all sizes to begin with. Get YOURS early!

Fear Failure and You Meet It.

By Herbert Kaufman

The hand that shuns the thorn must lose the rose. Rewards are always beset with risk. Success lies behind a spear-tipped wall—without a gateway.

If you fear to fall you're sure to fail. You'll fare as you dare.

Even a bird must try before it can fly. It masters fright, then flight. Every effort brings courage to its wing. The first futile flutters are not wasted—each tumble teaches one more error of position.

An instinct, as old as Nature, whispers to the helpless fledgling that existence hangs upon persistence.

You, too, must stand your bruise or stand to lose.

Errors are not handicaps, provided that they teach lessons whose helpfulness offsets the hurt.

Good judgment is not an inheritance. It is attained through deduction from experience. It is the total that remains after impetuosity and carelessness and passion have been eliminated from strength and ability.

All men have natural weaknesses just as all metals are cheapened by their slag. Only the crucible of life can refine character.

The most vital of all educations, is that which subtracts folly from force and tells us of the things we must not do.

Before we are really schooled, we must all be fooled and ruled—cheated and defeated. Pain makes men sane—we do not repeat the errors which do us injury.

One by one we catalog the pitfalls of the past—year by year we enter our experiments on the ledgers of memory, until our brains are indexed for ready reference and Yesterday becomes a guide-book to safety.

You cannot escape your setbacks or your disappointments because no human can quite control emotion or lift the hood from the face of Future.

You must play the GAME and be prepared to pay its penalties. Therefore play for the bigger stakes. Your ambition measures your rights, so try for the top, even though you do go back time and time again, to the starting point.

Most of us must be content with the lesser lot, but not with ourselves until we've strained brain and sinew and determination to the limit.

There is no fixed and stated hour for the turning of the tide.

Wellington was already grey at Waterloo. Rothschild was in the winter of his life when he risked his all upon the fate of Bonaparte. Friedenwald was a grandfather when his last dollar established the utility of the crown cork. Zeppelin was a venerable bankrupt before he achieved his dream. Mergenthaler was wrinkled and starving while he worked over the very machine with which this sheet was set in type.

Men chiefly vary in the degree of their tenacity. Cowardice and courage are the main divisors of society—the brave are masters and the weaklings serve.

Intellect and skill are canceled by irresolution—THE SEATS OF THE MIGHTY ARE BIRTHRIGHTS OF THE SONS OF HOPE.

HOUSEKEEPERS GIVEN ADVANTAGE OF BEST COOKING SCHOOL RECIPES

THIS IS WAY TO PASTEURIZE MILK

THE method called Pasteurization consists in heating the milk to 155 degrees Fahrenheit and keeping it at that temperature for twenty or thirty minutes. It is then cooked rapidly, and will usually keep three or four days when covered and kept in a cool place. Tell storekeeper before ordering if milk is wanted for cooking purposes only, and not for drinking, as the latter is richer.

If an thermometer is used, it must be kept until well boiled, as it is not to be taken from the milk. Set the bottle where milk is to be cooled, whether ice box or cellar, then place the bottle in ice water and keep in cold water until ready to use. Keep them in a cold place. GET RID OF FEAR

Reason, Which Distinguishes Men from Beasts, Cannot Exist in a Mind That Is Paralyzed by Terror or Stupefied by Timidity.

EVERY parent whose theory of bringing up children consists in making them afraid of him, every "boss" who bullies his employes, every domineering petty tyrant in office whether political or military would do well to ponder a moment what he is doing as an animal trainer does when he works.

Animal trainers, particularly those who handle wild animals, begin their work by making their victims thoroughly afraid.

If you have ever watched a trainer leaping unflinchingly through a hoop, his blazing eyes fixed on the whip that is always ready in the trainer's hand, you have discovered that to inspire fear is also to inspire HATE.

Now and then one of the big cats sees an opportunity, and then that pent up hatred that has been stored away in his savage brain with every lash of the whip rises superior to his terror, and the men outside the cage must be very quick with their irons to avert a horrible tragedy.

No doubt the father who continually threatens his child with beatings and only too often carries out his threat fancies that he is working for the good of the child. The penitentiaries are full of men who have had that kind of training. Taught to fear and to HATE authority when they were children, they continue to hate authority when they are grown to manhood. Some day the hatred gets the better of their fear, is thrown off and a mutiny, a jail delivery, a warden put out of the way, or a keeper killed has been the result.

Bear in mind, you who are tyrants of the home or of the office or of the factory or of the school, that it is human nature, as well as animal nature, to hate everything that is used to bring an animal thoroughly afraid.

Many a schoolboy carries in his breast the hatred that was first aroused by the bullying, flogging methods of his teacher. Many a child grows up with a hatred for the father he might have loved had not fear been the only feeling aroused.

It is not a pleasant sight to see a boy sent to his room for some trivial offense and left there for an hour or two till he is out of a father shall come to punish him. It is the terror that is wakened in the tender little mind in the very dangerous elements of hatred. And sooner or later, if he lives, the father will find that hatred come home to him and bring sorrow and belated repentance with it.

Civilization has pretty well [illegible] of the fear of the supernatural. Men no longer torture witches, practising the most extreme cruelties because of the fear that the witches may harm them. The ghosts and the banshees and the bugaboos that used to keep terrified children awake at night and cause grave uneasiness to their elders have dissolved into nothingness before the rising sun of intelligence.

Seventy-five years ago the sight of the comet blazing in the sky drove men and women into ecstasies of terror. To-day the comet is hailed by men and women and children with [illegible] as its progress in the newspapers.

Intelligence, the dissipation of the superstitions and terrors has been an immense gain to mankind and civilization. No man or nation can progress when ruled by fears and terrors and [illegible] and bring about the [illegible].

John Fiske in his [illegible] points out that no man is a coward, no man so timid as the man who is [illegible] of the unseen.

In the early days of the colonization of America the colonists were a number of times [illegible] the Indians became thoroughly frightened, organized into an army and in one case absolutely destroyed an entire Indian village, killing men, women and children alike. These were intelligent, educated men—men who had fought for their freedom in England and, having lost the battle, emigrated to America to find homes where they could think and act as they pleased.

Kindly they were in ordinary times, brave in war and of high moral character. But the fear that had been implanted in their breasts by the repeated assault of the red men, the haunting dread of renewed attacks, with the horrors that might attend them, frightened them into brutes as unreasoning and cruel as were the savages they destroyed.

To read of some of the massacres perpetrated not by uncivilized Indians, but by civilized white men is enough to destroy faith in human kind. But when we remember that night after night the settlers lay in their cabins listening for the approach of the savages, that day after day they were haunted by the knowledge that their own safety and the safety of their wives and children were in jeopardy, that extermination of the Indian [illegible] may be better understood.

Any plan [illegible] will tell you that it is no the seasoned [illegible] who fear, but the timid tenderfoot, afraid for the first time with a revolver and [illegible] frightened into [illegible]. The nervous [illegible] who keeps a revolver under his pillow to shoot burglars is [illegible] pen to [illegible] but he is [illegible] dreads [illegible] the burglar. [illegible] fear [illegible] he [illegible]. He is [illegible] trembling [illegible] [illegible] tion of [illegible] [illegible]. Two [illegible] stories, of no [illegible] that [illegible] cent people have been [illegible] the cowardice [illegible] what a hideous [illegible] with dangerous [illegible].

The American War Down in Nicaragua

It IS American, you know.

American courage is in the thick of it, behind the guns that shoot straight.

Secretary Knox and the State Department are anxiously watching the pot.

And, when the time comes, they will skim it off and set it away to cool, a dish fit for—American commercial exploitation. Meanwhile, it is far from the comic opera kind of war, for 3,000 or more men have fallen already.

Leslie R. Hahn, COSMOPOLITAN MAGAZINE'S special correspondent, fresh from Nicaragua, has a peculiarly illuminating article in the current number on, What the War in Nicaragua Means to the United States.

Among the other strong features of this great number are: The Problem of Subsistence, a remarkable grouping of the opinions of nineteen prominent men on the causes of the increased cost of living; Morocco—a New El Dorado for American Enterprise; another of Harold Bolce's vastly significant revelations of the extreme radicalism of our college teachings, this time in the girls' colleges; the first of a brand new series of "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" stories, by George Randolph Chester, and many other good things.

CHAPTER I.

From Him That Hath Not.

ROBERT ... Spaulding of ... Mass., Senior Member of the firm of Spaulding & Spaulding, Importers of motoring garments and accessories, listened to the switchboard operator's announcement with grave attention, unbuckling it with a tuneless "All right. Send him in." Then hooking of the telephone he swung around in his chair to face the door of his private office, and in a brief ensuing interval painstakingly ironed out of his face and attitude every indication of ill humor of mind in which he awaited his caller.

It was, as a matter of fact, anything but a pleasant one, he had a distasteful duty to perform, but that was the last thing he designed to become evident. Like most good business men he nursed a pet superstition or two, and of the number of these the first was that he must in all his dealings present an inscrutable front, like a poker player's; captains of industry were uniformly like that, Spaulding understood; if they entertained emotions it was strictly in private.

Occasionally it deceived others; notably now it bewildered Duncan as he entered on the echo of Spaulding's "Come!" He had apprehended the visage of a thunder storm, with a rattle of brusque complaints. He encountered Spaulding as he had always seemed—a little blunker for glasses, whose lenses seemed always to catch the light and, glaring, mask the eyes behind them; a prosperous man of affairs, well groomed both as to body and as to mind, a machine for the transaction of business, with all a machine's vivacity and temperamental responsiveness.

A Human Business Machine.

It was that quality in him that Duncan envied, who was vaguely impressed that, if he himself could only imitate Spaulding minutely, the phegm of a mastodon would learn to ape something of its efficiency and so, ultimately, prove himself of some worth to the world—and incidentally Natalie Duncan.

Thus far his spasmodic attempts to adapt to the requirements and limitations of the world of business his own equipment of moist inclinations and ill-assorted abilities had unanimously turned out signal failures, so he envied Spaulding without particularly admiring him.

Now the sight of his employer, professionally bland and capable, and with no animus to be discerned in his attitude, provided Duncan with one brief, evanescent flash of hope, one last expiring instant of dignity (tempered by his unquenchable humor) in which to face his fate. Something of the hang-dog vanished from his habit and for a little time he carried himself again with all his one-time grace and confidence.

"Good afternoon, Mr. Spaulding," he said, replying to a nod as he dropped into the chair that nod had indicated. A faint smile lightened his expression and made it quite engaging.

"G'afternoon" Spaulding surveyed him sagittily, then laced his fat little fingers and contemplated them with detached intentness. "Just got in, Duncan?"

"On the 3:30 from Chicago" * * *

There was a pause, during which Spaulding reviewed his fingernails with impartial interest; in that pause Duncan's poor little hope died a natural death. "I got your wire," he resumed; "I mean it, it got me—overtook me at Minneapolis * * * So here I am."

"Too haven't wasted time."

Spaulding lifted his brows ever so slightly. "Wha'?"

"Well, I gathered from the fact that you wired me to come home that you wanted my advice."

"Your Advice?" He Asked.

A second time Spaulding gestured with his eyebrows, for once fairly surprised out of his pose. "Your advice?" * * * *

"Yes" said Duncan evenly, "as to whether you ought to give up your customers on my route or send them a man who could sell goods."

"Well" * * * Spaulding admitted.

"Oh, don't think I'm bonstag of my quickness; anybody could have guessed as much from the great number of heavy orders I have not been sending you."

"You've had bad luck" * * *

"No mean you have, Mr. Spaulding. It was good luck for me to be drawing down my weekly checks, bad luck to you not to have a man who could earn them."

His desperate honesty touched Spaulding a trifle; at the risk of not seeming a business man to himself he hastened dubiously to recant, to give Duncan another chance.

The fervor was likable enough, his employer considered; he had good humor and, even in dejection, distinction, whatever he was not, he was a man of birth and breeding. He [illegible] to write with the old stubble, as it was, his shirt cuffs frayed his shoes down at the heel, his baggy clothing sadly ready-made as they were, there remained his air. You'd think he might amount to something, to somewhat more than a mere something given half a chance in the right direction. Then what?

* * * Spaulding sought from Duncan elucidation of this riddle.

Awkwardly

"Yes; of course," said Duncan promptly, losing "sorry if I tired you."

"What do you mean by 'yes, of course?'"

"That you called me in to give me—and so that's over with. Only I'd be sorry to have you sore on Kellogg for saddling me on you. You see, he believed I'd make good, and so did I; in a way, at least, I hoped so."

"Oh, that's all right," said Spaulding unconfortably. "The trouble is, you see, we've nothing else open just now. But if you'd really like another chance on the road, I—I'll be glad to speak to Mr. Atwater about it."

"Don't you do it" Duncan counselled him sharply, aghast. "He might say yes. And I simply couldn't accept; it wouldn't be fair to you, Kellogg or myself. It'd be charity—for I've proved I can't earn my wages; and I haven't come to that yet. No!" he concluded, with determination, and picked up his hat.

Duncan Grows Determined.

"Just a minute" Spaulding held him with a gesture. "You're forgetting something, at least I am. There's a month's pay coming to you; the cashier will hand you the check as you go out."

"A month's pay!" Duncan said blankly. "How's that? I've drawn up to the end of this week already, if you don't know it."

"Of course, I knew it. But we never let our men go without a month's notice or its equivalent and ——

"No," Duncan interrupted firmly. "No; but thank you just the same. I couldn't. I really couldn't. It's good of you, but" * * * Now," he broke off abruptly, "I've left my accounts what there is of them—with the bookkeeping department, and the checks for my sample trunks. There'll be a few dollars coming to me on my expense account, and I'll send you my address as soon as I get one."

"No," reiterated Duncan positively. "There's no use. I'm grateful to you for your intention of me and all that. But we can't do anything better now than end it all off. Good-by, Mr. Spaulding."

Spaulding nodded, accepting defeat with the better grace because of an inate conviction that it was just no end after all. A fortheroner he admired Duncan's stand. So he offered his hand—an unusual condescension. "You'll make good somewhere yet," he asserted.

"I wish I could believe it." Duncan's grasp was firm, since he felt more assured if some humanity latent in his late employer. "However * * * Goodby."

"Good luck to you," rang in his ears as the door put a period to the interview.

He stopped and took up the battered suit case and rusty overcoat which he had left outside the junior partners office, then, went on, shaking his head. "Much obliged," he said huskily to himself. "But what's the good of that? There's squares of soiled note-paper upon which no room anywhere for a professional lament. And that's what I am; just a never-do-well. I never realized what that meant, really, before, and it's certainly taken me a long time to find out. But I know now, all right. * * *"

Outside on the steps of the building he paused a moment, fascinated by the brisk spectacle afforded by lower Broadway at the hour when the eave-like offices in its cliff-like walls begin to empty themselves, when the overlords and their lieutenants close their desks and turn faces boulevard, leaving the details of the day's routine to be wound up by underlings.

In the clear light of the late Spring afternoon a stream of humanity was high and fluent upon the sidewalks. Duncan had glimpses of keen faced men, bright-eyed women, quickened not unlikely a few as one walked in the ball, jealous of her gay bill.

Life on "The Avenue."

And to this he must return, to that treadmill round of blighted days and joyless nights must set his face * * *

Alighting at the Grand Central station, he packed the double weight of his luggage and his cares a few blocks northward on Madison avenue ere turning west toward the bachelor rooms which Kellogg had established in the roaring forties, just the other side of the Avenue—Fifth avenue, on a corner of which Duncan presently was bold up for a time by a press of traffic.

He lingered indifferently, waiting for the mounted policeman in charge of the corner, watching the while with lack-lustre eyes the interminable procession of cabs and landaus, taxis and town cars that cut romped by hazardously, crowding the street from curb to curb.

The day was of young June, though gray and a little chill with the discouraged spirit of a retarded season. Though the begins of the well-to-do in their summer homes had long since set in, still there remained in the city sufficient of their class to keep the Avenue populous from Twenty-third street north to the Plaza in the evening hours.

The suggestion of wealth, or luxury, of money's illimitable power, pervaded the atmosphere intensely, an ineluctable influence—to an independent man heady, to Duncan maddening. He surveyed the parade with mutiny in his heart. All this he had known, a part of it had been—upon a time. Now * * * the shafts of his roving eyes here and there detected faces recognizable, of boys' apartment. He let himself in with [illegible] stealth. As was quite right and proper, Kellogg's man Robbins was in attendance—a stupefied Robbins, thunderstruck by the unexpected return of his master's friend and guest. "Good Lord" he cried at sight of Duncan. "Beg your pardon, sir, but—but it can't be you."

Kellogg's Man Worried.

"No, sir. But I am expecting him any minute. He'll be surprised to see you back."

"Think so?" said Duncan dully. "It doesn't know me, if he I

"You see, sir, we thought you was out West."

"So you did." Duncan moved toward the door of his own bedroom. Robbins following.

"It was only yesterday I posted a letter to you for Mr. Kellogg, sir, and the address was Omaha."

"I didn't get that far. Fetch along that suitcase, will you please? I want to put some clean things in it."

"Then you're not staying in town over night, Mr. Duncan?"

"I don't know. I'm not staying here, anyway." Duncan switched on the lights in his room. "Put it on the bed, Robbins. I'll pack as quickly as I can. I'm in a hurry."

"Yes, sir, but I hope there's nothing wrong?"

"Just you bet." returned Duncan grimly; "everything's wrong." He jerked viciously at an obstinate bureau drawer, and when it yielded unexpectedly, with the well known impishness of the inanimate, he dumped upon the floor a tangled miscellany of shirts, socks, gloves and collars and ties

"Didn't you like the business, sir?"

"No, I didn't like the business—and it didn't like me. It's the same old story, Robbins. I've lost my job again—that's all."

"I'm very sorry, sir."

"Thank you but that's all right I'm used to it."

"And you're going to leave, sir?

"I am, Robbins."

"I may I take the liberty of hoping it's to take another position?"

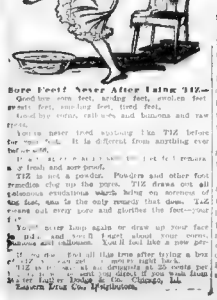
Happy, Happy, Use TIZ

A Marvel For Sore Feet. Acts Right Off.



Sore Feet! Never After Using "TIZ."

Good-by corns, callouses and bunions and raw places.

TIZ is not a powder. Powders and other foot remedies clog up the pores. TIZ draws out all poisonous exudations which bring on soreness of the feet, and is the only remedy that does. TIZ is acid; it's acid that does the foot-you-feel.

You'll never limp again or draw up your face in pain and you'll forget about your corns, bunions and callouses. You'll feel like a new person the moment you put on shoes and stockings.

If you want foot relief that you never got before, if you want your feet in such condition that you can wear smaller shoes if you want to wear pretty shoes, if you want foot happiness, get TIZ. Get a 25 cent box of it from any druggist or department store anywhere in the world. Don't suffer another day. Think of it—only 25 cents per box. Sold by Bauer & Black, Chicago, Ill.

The American War Down in Nicaragua

It IS American, you know.

American courage is in the thick of it, behind the guns that shoot straightest.

Secretary Knox and the State Department are anxiously watching the pot.

And, when the time comes, they will skim it off and set it away to cool, a dish fit for—American commercial exploitation. Meanwhile, it is far from the comic opera kind of war, for 3,000 or more men have fallen already.

Leslie R. Hahn, COSMOPOLITAN MAGAZINE'S special correspondent, fresh from Nicaragua, has a peculiarly illuminating article in the current number on, What the War in Nicaragua Means to the United States.

Among the other strong features of this great number are: The Problem of Subsistence, a remarkable grouping of the opinions of nineteen prominent men on the causes of the increased cost of living; Morocco—a New El Dorado for American Enterprise; another of Harold Bolce's vastly significant revelations of the extreme radicalism of our college teachings, this time in the girls' colleges; the first of a brand new series of "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" stories, by George Randolph Chester, and many other good things.

RHODE ISLAND PARTY LOST IN MOTOR IN WILDS OF FRANCE

The Wife of Former Governor Sprague, His Granddaughter and Others in Wild Ride.

20 YEARS OF DECORATIONS

Greatest Decorative Artist in the World Engaged on a Set of Marvellous Panels.

By VANCE THOMPSON.

Special Cable to Boston American.

PARIS, May 28. A wild automobile [illegible] Americans but their way and kept their friends in Paris in an agony of suspense for the entire night is the subject of much interesting gossip.

The [illegible] Mrs. William Sprague [illegible] Rhode Island; Mrs. Henry Stebbins, [illegible] Sprague's granddaughter, who is getting a divorce in Paris from the son of Attorney-General [illegible] of Rhode Island; [illegible] son of the United States consul-general at Berlin, Mr. [illegible] Lefevre [illegible] Denver.

The [illegible] Joan of Arc was [illegible] dinner [illegible] what they supposed to be [illegible] the [illegible] Havre, whereupon they started again, and it was not until daylight that they reached home. Meanwhile Governor Sprague, Judge Lefevre and [illegible] who had no word from them passed a very bad time indeed.

Twenty Years of Work.

While it is generally believed in New York that the magnificent mansion built by ex-Senator William A. Clark of Montana is now completed, it appears that at least twenty years are likely to be required to finish it entirely. The painting of the marvellous decorative panels and the bronze for Mrs. Clark, which will be inlaid with precious stones, will alone require a score of years.

For the [illegible] designed he has engaged Raphael Collin, the most celebrated decorative artist in the world. M. Collin is the leading professor of the Ecole des Beaux Arts in Paris and has decorated the Opera Comique, the Odeon Theatre and the Hotel de Ville of Paris. In some of Senator Clark's salons M. Collin has decided on Japanese art, in which he is an adept, so much so indeed that he has been made "A Knight of the Rising Sun." Some of those decorative panels are already 5x7 in size and are said to be equal to the finest ever seen in France.

Boudoir Is Marvelous.

The initial bauble for Mrs. Clark is said to be really a postponed wedding present and will be one of the wonders of Paris. When Senator Clark married Miss La Chapelle six years ago at Geneva he promised her a unique wedding gift. She was the beauty, wit and the daughter of a prominent Canadian physician. Her admiration was a special career, but the Senator indeed [illegible] a boudoir instead, with large panels of dismantle lake to blind the bird.

Mrs. Clark nearly accepted the generous offer and from then [illegible] apartment in the Avenue Victor Hugo during the Winter season and in Summer takes her children to her villa at Cannes. The Clarks little girls speak Spanish, Italian, French, English and German.

MONEY FOR POLE.

Captain Scott Assured of Funds to Make Dash South.

LONDON, May 28.—Captain Scott, the commander of the forthcoming expedition to the South Pole, in an interview recently said he was yet about $20,000 short of the guarantee of $200,000 which he asked for, but believed the amount would be subscribed.

As to other forms of help, one of the most recent was the offer of an Alpine guide, who was reputed to possess a special knowledge of the nature of glaciers and crevasses. This one, it accepted, would not be a burden Captain Scott explained on the score of the expedition, as he had planned it originally.

It is understood that the whole of the crew has not yet been definitely settled but this department and all of the preparations are nearing completion for the sailing of the expedition on June 1.

$10,000 FOR A BIRD WE KILLED BY MILLIONS

How the U.S. Government, State Legislatures and Societies Are Trying to Bring Back the Useful Wood Pigeon Whose Hordes Once Darkened the Skies.

TWENTY years ago the passenger pigeon, or the wood pigeon, as it is also called, existed in the United States by the millions. During their annual migrations, Agassiz reports their hordes were beyond belief. He tells of one swarm which flew in a path a half-mile wide and took fifteen hours to pass a given point.

That was twenty years ago, and now the United States Government, various State Legislatures and ornithological societies are offering rewards for the finding of a single passenger pigeon's nest.

These rewards, simply for the location of the bird, amount to $10,000 apiece for each nest in active use or containing the two little eggs which the wood pigeon lays.

In spite of this enormous reward there have been as yet not a single nest of the living bird found, although those interested are still hoping.

It has been one of the mysteries of bird lore what became of the passenger pigeon. It was always known that they were killed by millions when the human population of America began to increase. Like the buffalo, hundreds of thousands were destroyed wantonly; a comparatively small number were used for food.

Some apologists who do not wish to believe that man could, in so short a time, destroy so many living things, have propounded the theory of an epidemic among the birds themselves, but there has been no proof of this. The fact remains that there is not a wood pigeon left in the United States from those great hordes whose wings, two decades ago, darkened the skies.

The government experts have found that the bird occupied a really useful place in nature. For instance, if it existed now, there would probably be no gypsy moth plague in Massachusetts. The passenger pigeon took care of a hundred and one kinds of crawling things which are now destroying the farms, and that since it has died away there seems to be nothing else which can take its place.

This is the reason for a $10,000 reward for a single nest. The agricultural experts believe that if they can find one nest they can find two or three, and that then, with

That skeleton is the New Queen of England.

And with her coming to the throne of England the American women in English society are confronted by the ludicrous, fashionable woman in society, as the result of the unexpected death of King Edward.

The new Queen extends her highest disapproval to women who have six babies, whom they nursed themselves. No American woman in English society has six babies.

The new Queen considers that needlework is an appropriate occupation for a lady, and that smoking, drinking, and shooting are not. None of the American women in English society are [illegible]

The Americans came to England and spent their money, there because they knew it would receive encouragement from the King, and get into fashionable society. Now, that may be allowed out of society, and all their money will have been spent in vain.

King Edward believed in encouraging rich Americans to come to England and mix with English society. King George and Queen Mary hold that the Americans who come to England are vulgar, extravagant, demoralizing and should be discouraged.

The Delights of Night Walking

THE [illegible] persons walkers by night" has included many famous [illegible] of their time a number more [illegible] was [illegible] fond [illegible] and many others seemed to feel the need [illegible] of the evening influences of night at one [illegible] time or another. Byron was the original [illegible] of Byron's [illegible] also told Venetia the [illegible] reason of his preference for walking by night.

"Everything is so still," he says, "and then you hear the owls. I cannot make out why it is, but nothing gives me more pleasure than to get up when everybody is asleep. It seems as if one were the only living person in the world."

Swift was addicted to night walking, until his health did not permit of it any longer, a fact which he much regretted. According to Seneca, the habit was to be condemned, as an abuse of the proper uses of night and day, and certainly in a few instances it was carried too far.

A certain "Duke of Biska," according to the author of "Hudibras," turned day into night, and night into day. "He does not dwell in his house, but haunts it, like an evil spirit . . . ." Fielding tells us that his "Man of the Hill," who was none other than Good Fox, terrified the rustics owing to his nocturnal habits, and it is true that he puzzled them somewhat owing to the peculiar predilection for sitting in a hollow tree in the daytime, and walking the country o'er at night.

Sir Percival Tracey practised the philosophy he preached, and often rode by night for he averred that "There are truths of thought set in motion by the stars, which are dormant in the glare of the sun, and without such thoughts man's thinking is incomplete." He also quotes his gamekeeper, who declared that he was never in such good health as when he was up half the night watching in the preserves for poachers.

Certainly night, whether in town or country, has a charm all her own. There is a vast difference between a city at 11 p. m. and at 2 in the morning. At the latter hour the most familiar spots seem strange, for the streets are silent and deserted, the houses loom dark and solemn on either side, and one could imagine oneself in a deserted city, were it not for the measured tread of the policeman on his beat, or some belated wayfarer hurrying homeward.

In the country a different feeling prevails. Here is a peace more absolute, and the dim outlines of hedges, trees, and fields, are softly indistinct. The distant steeple of the village church alone stands out in sharp relief, the village nestling round it as though seeking protection. Or the scene may be wild and far removed from the dwellings of men, bringing to mind the poet's words:

"Beneath the full-orbed moon, that hung suspended in light
The mingled verdure of Helvellyn's steep,
My mind teeming with creations bright,
I walked like one who wanders in his sleep."

Dickens says in "The Uncommercial Traveller" that he was at one time temporarily unable to sleep "preferable to a dreamy feeling" [illegible] that caused me to walk about the streets all night for a week or two on end, nights." Perhaps the [illegible] left by these nocturnal wanderings helped him [illegible] Sydney Carton [illegible] and said near the house of [illegible] Manette.

Byron after [illegible] took to night walking in the streets of Pisa with Anne Elizabeth, who professed an adoration [illegible] of which these [illegible] would have brought [illegible] daylight, and with the evening [illegible] than they shuttered the windows not previously any of the clear light of day from coming in. [illegible] who did [illegible] would not be [illegible] [illegible] but [illegible] would [illegible] [illegible] innocence.

Then [illegible] of the "Recreations of a Country Parson," when he became a town parson, indulged frequently in [illegible] rambles through [illegible] [illegible] gas-lit streets, at which [illegible] he was wont to think out his essays. An [illegible] night walker was Professor Wilson. On one occasion he arrived at half past one in the morning at the [illegible] cottage at Grasmere, but the [illegible] was not there. [illegible] had wandered forth, despite [illegible] deep mid-winter snow; when he returned he found Professor Wilson fast asleep in his own bed, where he left him undisturbed until the morning.

OH WHAT A HAT!

Liane de Pougy, the French Beauty Wore it, Paris Laughed at it, Prince Ghika Fought Over it, and Now it Makes Its Wearer a Princess

Paris, May 18.

LIANE de Pougy bought a hat. Mon dieu what a hat. Prince Georges Ghika went walking with Liane and her hat. Mon dieu twice, what a nerve has that Prince Georges! The canaille, the bourgeoise, the sans culottes of St. Germaine-en-Laye saw Liane under the hat. Ha! ha! they laughed. Oh, what a hat! Mamselle has performed a coup in coop. She has made ten hens widows. Ha! ha!

Prince George snapped his fingers at the rude ones. Zut! but he has a nerve! Someone slapped his face. Prince George laid them out with hand and cane and the swift savate, the stroke of the foot. He sent challenges. He fought seven duels. Ah, he has the courage of the lion. Behold he then promises himself to marry that still beautiful Liane. Or, perhaps, he is married to her. Mon dieu thrice and onward what fortune! For is not Mlle. Liane still one of the real beauties of world?

And how pleased Princes Georges' relatives, his aunt, Queen Natalie of Servia, his father, the late Roumanian Minister to France, his cousin-in-law, Princess Jean Ghika, who was Miss Hazel Singer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles, the Princess De Polignac, who was Miss Winnie Singer, Singer of New York and Paris—will be, will they not. Indeed they will not.

It has been reported that this [illegible]

Liane de Pougy in Her Remarkable Three Foot Hat

[illegible] cried [illegible] Is it to [illegible] to be a [illegible] said [illegible] wonderful [illegible] shall [illegible] out from [illegible] three feet of [illegible] feet of [illegible] five [illegible] of Mlle [illegible] Prince Georges [illegible] into the heart of the amazed bourgeois of St. Germain [illegible]

In [illegible] of admiring [illegible] Leonard and [illegible] wife of the esteemed [illegible] Magistrate's Court, the other the spouse of the honorable partner of the green grocer on the [illegible] Mme. Henry and Mme. Leonard frankly stopped.

"Zut! what a hat!" said Mme. Henry, quite forgetting the princess that ought to be associated with a green grocer. [illegible] interruption of the two ladies came at a psychological moment. For some minutes [illegible] France and Maurice had been annoyed by the gathering crowd at their heels and by the rapid fire of comments [illegible] Mme. Henry stopped squarely on the pavement of St. Germain and looked with extreme astonishment at the [illegible]

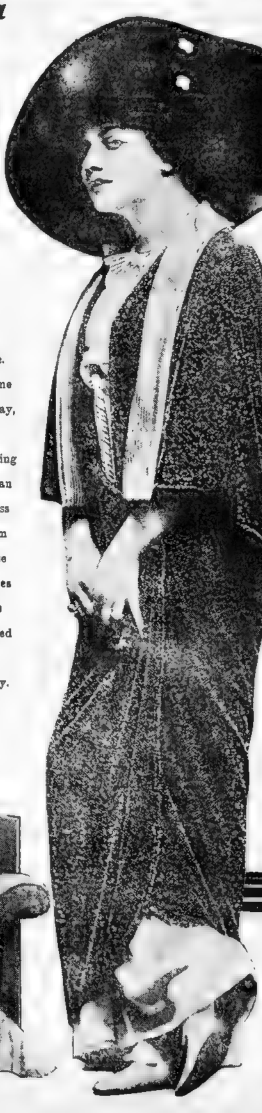
[illegible] said Mme. Leonard. [illegible] Prince Georges [illegible] and is quite taunting [illegible] three feet of [illegible] was the gay and [illegible] M. Leonard. [illegible] instead, he [illegible] the Prince [illegible] hands with [illegible] was the centre [illegible] Mlle. Liane, the Prince [illegible] it is true, [illegible] to the Hotel de Noailles. [illegible] the Prince [illegible] challenges [illegible] were good-[illegible]

[illegible] cried Mlle. Liane. "Will [illegible] princess," asked the Prince. Mlle. Liane, in a transport, threw herself [illegible] arms.

All of which is quite a shocking surprise to Parisians. For a long time they had believed that it was the beautiful, the chic Mlle. Yvonne de Bray, who had captured the fascinating Prince—brought him to his knees with her astonishing butterfly gown, her wonderful gown all of silver and gold.

It is true that the Prince was for a time completely obsessed by this gown, which added to the tout ensemble of Mlle. de Bray just the touch which made [illegible] style.

Alas! Then came along Mlle. Liane with that unrivalled, unapproachable hat. For Mlle. de Bray all was over—except to [illegible] present sensation in the [illegible] Monsieur [illegible]"



Mlle. Yvonne de Bray, the Charming Parisian Actress Whom Prince Georges Was Expected to Marry.

was a [illegible] of pearl [illegible] bacchanal [illegible] that it was a [illegible] King Leopold [illegible] a pill box [illegible] of rich yellow [illegible] topped a bow of [illegible] ribbon and [illegible] sels of red. [illegible] topped tassels of purple [illegible] heavenward two [illegible] three feet [illegible] Liane. And five [illegible] seven of Prince Georges. Ha! [illegible] It is the comet said the bourgeois of St. Germaine. We can tell [illegible]

Then the combat. [illegible] terrific!

It seems destiny [illegible] it is apparent that [illegible] won [illegible] triumph [illegible] Liane would have been transported had it been her intellect. Yet it was ever so with her. When after two years of dull bourgeoise marriage she astonishingly announced that she was going to be good no longer, it was [illegible] applied that won her success on the Paris stage. By her apparel [illegible] over la belle Otero, her only rival, and became the reigning beauty of France. It was the strings of pearls and jewels that marked [illegible] But [illegible] she wrote a book it was so chastely conceived that not a soul would read it.

It is a hat that has won her a title [illegible] ships [illegible] our unsuspecting and unintellectual [illegible] Hélas! How puzzling is life.

But to return to Liane and her hat. From the fruits of her conquests [illegible] Mlle. de Pougy bought half the Hôtel de Noailles [illegible] wonderful [illegible] of the famous Marechal in St. Germain-de-Laye only a few miles from beloved Paris. There she dwelt. The other half of the hotel is owned by an eccentric Parisian who believes himself the incarnation of the Marechal and is quite happy. It was ideal. On one side Mlle. Liane writing those [illegible] books and plays [illegible] the Marechal's incarnation walking with warlike tread through his gardens. On one side Mlle. Liane longing to become of the nobility;

[illegible] believing himself [illegible] ideal quantity [illegible] Prince Georges [illegible] over twenty. Mlle. is much older than Eve was at the time of [illegible] of her two sons [illegible] quite necessary absence of [illegible]

So many [illegible] St. Germain. Mlle. Liane does not like the bourgeois [illegible] Prince Georges up to the hotel [illegible] Mademoiselle about it. [illegible] to shock the clerks [illegible] in their [illegible] St. Germain.

Therefore one day not long ago there came from a fashionable milliner in Paris a [illegible] box. Almost four feet tall [illegible] small feet of [illegible] carried [illegible] the fringe of skirts flashed under it, a pair of arms encircled it. Beyond that was nothing but the four feet of box.

"Six Talks with the Stage Struck Girl"

THE following article is number one of a series dealing with the factors which make for success upon the stage which David Belasco has written most delightfully for this newspaper. Most readers of this page will agree that no dramatic author or producer of plays is better equipped by natural gift and experience to illuminate this subject than Mr Belasco is. To-day the element of beauty is considered. Future articles will deal with the various other qualities which enter into the make-up of the thoroughly capable actor or actress

By David Belasco.

WHAT part does beauty or the lack of it occupy as a factor in woman's success on the stage? This is a question which is often asked me, and my answer is invariably the same

Beauty, I reply to my questioners, beauty, that is, mere physical beauty, bears no relation whatever to success on the stage

If ever there was a time when beauty played any appreciable part in the equipment of the dramatic artist, that time has long since gone by. I doubt, however, whether in any period of the history of the stage a woman of consummate beauty has ever succeeded in putting herself to use a histrionic genius of the first rank

Pretty actresses of mediocre talents we have, like the poor, always with us, and ever shall have, but I have yet to learn of any of the great awe-inspiring world geniuses who have been or are, as the phrase goes, "ten thousand dollar beauties."

We have but to glance at the portraits that have come down to us of the great Rachel, of Mrs. Siddons, of Ristori, Charlotte Cushman, and that brilliant galaxy of artist women which shone with such splendor around the figure of eighteenth century Garrick, to prove our premise that the woman of supreme facial beauty is not dowered with the quint-essential genius for dramatic interpretation.

And current stars, are the faces of any of the great artistes of sufficient to draw from us the unalloyed admiration which some of them would take first prize at a beauty show. But, the world in front of it when we look at those same faces, how very, very ordinary some of them are! Altogether not-to-be-wished for is a merely beautiful face. We come in the strange and wonderful absence of anything approaching beauty in the face of the great Rachel, a something ten thousand times more compelling than beauty.

To those who have had the rare fortune of seeing Rachel in any of her great roles it has become a tradition—the absence in the actress of anything of beauty. The same is true, though in a less degree, of Mrs. Siddons, of whom one of her contemporaries recorded that while Mrs. Siddons may be a beauty, her face is [illegible] her art. Which is as it should be

Nobody Thought About Mrs. Siddons's Beauty.

It was also said, and by the same wit, that there was drama yea even tragedy, in Mrs. Siddons' stabbing of a baked potato. In the light of which verdicts this passed down to us we can readily appreciate how very little difference it made either to Mrs. Siddons herself or to eighteenth century England whether or not she was a beauty

We have thus far been using the word beauty in its general and common acceptation. That is, we have been referring to merely physical and material beauty. There is however a higher and more subtle beauty than this. This what we might term rarefied beauty, I would have it understood, is the almost invariable attribute of the great tragedian and emotional actress. This beauty all the great women already named possessed to an extraordinary degree, and likewise do all the great histrionic artists of the present day. Some call it charm; some call it temperament, some call it magnetism; but call it what you will, it is ever potent to sway the mind the heart and the emotions of the beholder as no physical beauty could ever hope to do.

It was by this divine gift that Rachel possessed the power of filling her audience with terror when she assayed the great roles of classic Greek tragedy. And by the same token do all our first-class artists of the present day accomplish their supreme triumphs in the interpretation of modern drama.

Another question I am often asked is the why of all this. Is it not possible for a really beautiful woman to be a really great dramatic artist? And if it is not, how do I explain the phenomenon? In reply I can only say that, not being omniscient, I do not know. There is no more accounting for this fact among dramatic artists than there is among those of any other branch of art. For some reason or other nature seems not to have seen fit to dower any one type of man or woman with all of the good things of life and being.

In the great scheme of things, she, nature, seems to have arrived at a distribution of gifts on a basis which is infinitely equitable, and in which the case of the actress is not anomalous. Wherever she has gifted woman with gigantic intellect, with surpassing goodness of heart and mind, or brilliant charm of personality, she has most equitably withheld the crown of supreme physical beauty, and vice versa.

Sappho, for instance, the greatest woman poet of all time, if we are to believe the incontrovertible evidence of history and tradition, was a woman of exceedingly plain face—so plain, indeed, that we may read in innumerable lines of her deathless verse her own longing for that one thing which was withheld.

The Lasting Charm of Great Plain Women.

The same thing is true practically of every other great woman poet, painter and musician. It is not necessary to cite the well-known examples of George Eliot and George Sand, two of as great creative literary artists as ever lived, and women, too, who, despite their total lack of beauty, were nevertheless able to awaken love and passion of an intensity and sincerity such as few beautiful women have ever succeeded in awakening.

In speaking of George Sand, we must remember that Chopin, than whom there was never a greater lover of beauty, fell madly in love with her after his quarrel and break with the other plain-faced woman who had also captivated him—the great Rachel. It is extremely doubtful whether Chopin could have ever loved either George Sand or Rachel, or have been influenced by them to the extent that he was, had either of these great women geniuses possessed pink cheeks and languid eyes with long lashes.

Whenever I am asked to express an opinion about beauty in this relation I always think of that epigram: "When a man falls in love with a pretty woman he may get over it, but when he falls in love with a plain one the case is hopeless." That expresses, I think, better than anything else, the real status of the beautiful woman on the stage.

Collectively and individually we all admire beauty in whatsoever guise it may be presented to our vision, but with beauty and beauty alone we are not content for long. By and by there comes a time when mere beauty palls upon us, if it is not reinforced with something of the spiritual or mental, or both. As a man tires very, very quickly of a woman whose only claim to his attention is her pretty face, so, too, does the and once fire of the pretty actress of the hour when she has no gray matter in her head, no feeling in her breast. For, after all, it is mind and heart and temperament that count. This is true both on the stage and off.

If being an actress consisted only of striking pretty attitudes and gracefully strutting up and down the boards, then, indeed, would beauty and beauty alone be the supreme good. But, being an actress consists of a great deal more than attitudinizing. It means the ability to portray real womanhood in a thousand and one varying phases of emotion and spiritual conflict, in which beauty, or the lack of it, plays no part whatever.

"When mere beauty palls on us."

"It is doubtful whether Chopin could have loved a beautiful woman."

"Beauty, or the lack of it, plays no part."

The New French Night Cap, a Revival of the Fashion of a Century Ago, Which Protects Milady's Coiffure at Night and Adorns Her Head at Breakfast.

Put On Your Little White Night Cap.

It's the Very Latest Idea for the Boudoir.

THE latest addition to milady's outfit is a night cap—and not the kind that you imbibe either. It is simply a revival of the fashion which flourished in Marie Antoinette's time, but which has not been seen for the past one hundred years.

All the leading shops are now showing the latest creations in the new-old idea, and the caps are rapidly becoming the vogue, so much so in fact that milady is wondering how she has managed so long to do without them.

The caps are made to match the negligee gown, and are worn not only throughout the night, but in the morning in the boudoir as well, and some of them are so becoming that their wearers have kept them on until after breakfast, too.

The pretty design shown in the picture at the head of this column is made out of three-inch width of Normandie valenciennes lace to match the negligee gown of the same material, with a bow of satin ribbon. The cap is circular in form and is of the mop-cap shape, with a frill in front and a casting through which the ribbon runs.

They come, too, with wider frill at the back of the neck, and made of embroidery. They are very attractive and becoming to almost any one.

Another very pleasing design is shown in crepe de chine, made to match a negligee gown of the same material and trimmed with the same kind of ribbon.

In addition to the night caps proper there are a number of styles adapted for boudoir use which are usually less close fitting than the night caps and lack the strings tied high under the chin.

For lazy people, there could be nothing more satisfactory than this night-cap idea. Instead of bothering to dress one's hair before breakfast, it is now possible to appear at the breakfast table in a presentable state without any loss of time. Perhaps a stray curl will find its way from under the frill of the night cap—but that will only add to its charm, and in fact should the stray curl not make its appearance voluntarily it might be a good idea to coax it a little. Marie Antoinette, with a curl to set off the beauty of her countenance, is a familiar picture to most of us, and it is a simple matter now for the girls of to-day to copy the becoming style by means of the dainty night cap.

But besides being a great time saver and a great aid to the lazy, the new idea is really economical. While the styles being shown extensively in the exclusive shops are naturally rather expensive, costing anywhere from $5 to $25, depending upon the material used, any girl can readily make just as pretty and as effective a night cap herself for much less. There is nothing complex about the making, and the cost of the material may be as great a matter or as little as one's purse will allow.

Some girls who have taken to the new idea have found it feasible to protect a coiffure which particularly pleased them for no less than three days, and their friends wondered how it was that they were able to appear the next day on three successive nights with their hair dressed in precisely the same manner.

Another charming feature of the fashion is the insertion of perfumed sachets in the lining of the cap, which naturally imparts a delightful scent to the hair. The sachet may be worn between the hair and the cap or may be worn [illegible]

Some Plain Home Dishes

By Mme. Luisa Tetrazzini.

SO often I have heard persons, especially men tired of travel and literally sick of hotels say: "What wouldn't I give for a meal of plain, home dishes!"

Well, here are those dishes, and they needn't pay for them, either, any more than the price of a copy of this newspaper. The stomach does weary of rich foods and craves simple things. This page contains only those simple things. I have a further purpose in this "plain page." The recipes are such as any young housekeeper can safely undertake. Before giving them, let me tell that young housekeeper to keep in mind while preparing the dishes these important facts. One pound of flour is the same as one quart. One pound eight ounces of meal is the same as one quart. One pound of butter is the same as one quart. One pound eight ounces of pounded white sugar is the same as one quart. Ten eggs of ordinary size weigh one pound. One common glass or tumbler holds half a pint. A teacup holds a gill.

Egg Soup.

TWO tablespoonfuls of flour, two eggs, one tablespoonful of water. Stir the eggs into the flour. Add the water and make a smooth paste. Stir the paste into two quarts of boiling beef broth. Boil for at least five minutes.

Dumpling Soup.

TWO tablespoonfuls of butter. Four large crackers. Two eggs. Stir the butter until light. Roll the crackers with a bread roller. Mix these well with the butter and eggs. Let them stand for about a half hour. Place the dumplings in boiling beef broth. Let bo a quarter of an hour.

Swiss White Soup.

CUT veal steaks into small pieces. Put them into cold water and set on the fire. Let them stew gently until the meat is partly done. Add one potato, which has been cut into very thin slices or small cubes. Add a little parsley or celery. When the meat has been cooked tender, add a dash of salt and pepper, a pint of sweet milk and a teaspoonful of butter, or less if you dislike a rich soup. Beat up two eggs and stir them rapidly in while the soup is boiling. Strain clear and serve.

Baked Whitefish.

PLACE a whole fish when cleaned in a bakepan. Season with salt and pepper to taste. Pour over it a half teacupful of melted butter. Place over it three large tomatoes crushed or cut up. Bake in a moderate oven for one hour to an hour and a quarter.

Baked Salmon

SCALD the fish to make the scales come off easily. Lay flat in a pan. Dust flour thickly over it. Sprinkle pepper and salt over it. Chop a teaspoonful of butter into small bits and scatter these over the fish. Add also a half of a lemon cut into very thin slices. Baste often. Pour the gravy over the fish when serving. Garnish with curly parsley or with slices of the other half of lemon.

Corn Soup.

ONE dozen ears of corn. Scrape and boil them twenty minutes in one quart of water. Remove the cobs. Put in the corn. Boil for a quarter of an hour. Add two quarts of milk, a tablespoonful of butter and two tablespoonfuls of flour, also a dash of pepper and salt, boil for ten minutes. While this mixture is boiling beat well in a soup dish the yolks of three eggs. Pour the soup over these eggs.

Baked Whole Cabbage.

Veal Duck.

SEASON a veal steak with salt and pepper. Spread over it bread crumbs that have soaked in milk or softened in melted butter. If into the crumbs have been mixed chopped onions or sage the flavor is improved, according to some tastes, including my own. Roll this carefully and tie in place with clean white twine. Spread over the roll a few slices of salt pork. Sew around all a thin white cloth. Place in a dripping pan with a half teacupful of water and bake in a moderate oven for an hour. Then rip the cloth off carefully and bake for another hour, or until brown, basting often. Pour the gravy over it before serving.

Mme. Tetrazzini Preparing Tea Bun Dough to be Baked in Muffin Tins.

Washington Omelet.

ONE teacupful of boiling milk; six eggs, one teacupful of bread crumbs; one large tablespoonful butter. Pour the teacupful of boiling milk over the bread crumbs. Let them soak until soft. Break the eggs into a bowl. Stir but do not beat the eggs until they are well mixed. Then pour in the bread crumbs. Season well with pepper and salt. Pour into a skillet in which the butter has been melted. Fry slowly. Cut into squares. Turn. Fry until a golden brown. Serve very hot.

Remnants of Roasts.

CUT the remnants into slices, stripping them of all their fat. Sprinkle the bottom of the baking dish with salt, flour and pepper. Arrange in the pan a layer of the sliced meat. Then sprinkle thickly with flour, salt and pepper. Then the meat, then the flour, until all the meat has been arranged. Over the last layer place some slices of tomatoes. Cover all with hot water. Cover the dish tightly and slowly bake for three hours.

Eggs with Drawn Butter.

BOIL a half dozen eggs hard. Take off the shells. Place them in a shallow dish and pour over them melted butter highly seasoned with salt, pepper and cayenne pepper. If desired the eggs can be placed on several slices of toast. Toast always helps out a dish by giving it more substance and daintiness as well as making a small dish seem larger.

Spanish Steak.

PLACE in a dripping pan a round or flank steak. Slice enough onions to cover the steak and partly cook the onions in a half pint of water. Drain the onions. Place them on the steak. Place over them also a large tomato, sliced. Sprinkle thickly over them salt and pepper and a little grated cheese.

Baked Cabbage.

BOIL a medium-sized head of cabbage fifteen minutes. Drain and set aside until cold. Chop very fine. Beat well two eggs. Stir these with a tablespoonful of butter, three tablespoonfuls of cream, and a half teaspoonful of salt and pepper upon the cabbage. Stir them thoroughly and bake in a small buttered dish. Add a half cup of water. A few raisins dipped in a saucepan containing a teaspoonful of butter and the same amount of lard. Fry over a quick fire until the tomatoes are a light brown.

Corn Rolls.

ONE pint of cornmeal, one pint of boiling milk, two tablespoonfuls of white sugar, one teaspoonful of salt. Stir all together and let stand until cool. Last stir in three eggs that have been well beaten and bake in corn pans.

Tea Puffs.

THREE teacups of flour, one and one half teacups of sweet milk, two tablespoonfuls of melted butter, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one half teaspoon of salt. Bake in a muffin tin.

Ginger Cookies.

MIX one cup of molasses, one cup of sugar, one cup of shortening, one egg one teaspoonful of soda dissolved in one-half cup of hot water, one teaspoonful of ginger and enough flour to make a light dough.

Rice and Apple Pudding.

ONE quart of boiled rice, three pints of tart, chopped apples, half a cup of sugar. Arrange these in layers in an earthen baking dish with half a cup of water. A few raisins dipped in hot water will improve it. Bake in a moderate oven for twenty minutes in a quick oven currants or prunelles, may be stirred in, if desired. Serve with cream and sugar.

Fried Smelts.

BEAT one egg well. Roll a half dozen crackers into fine crumbs. Season plentifully with salt and pepper. Dip the smelts into this and fry in a pan a quarter filled with melted butter.

Fried Tomatoes

SELECT six large ripe tomatoes, either red or yellow. Season with salt and pepper. Roll a half dozen crackers. Beat two eggs. Slice the tomatoes and fish for twenty minutes in a quick oven or a half hour in a slow oven.

Sponge Cake.

BEAT the yolks and whites of five eggs separately. To these add one cup of sugar, one cup of flour, a half teaspoonful of baking powder, one teaspoonful of milk and a pinch of salt.

Berry Pudding

THREE pounds of berries, one-half pint of molasses, flour enough to make the mixture stiff, and a teaspoonful of soda. Mix well and boil for two hours. Serve with this pudding a sauce made of one cup of sugar, one-half cup of butter, a tablespoonful of flour, and enough hot water to make the sauce of the consistency desired

By LADY BARCLAY.

I ENTERED a tortuous, covered, dark, and very leading lane to attract from the most crowded part of the bazaar in Teheran into what reminded me at once of the old Moorish house in Spain. The passage cut into the wall was like a tortuous way to a torture chamber of the Inquisition. Here and there a Persian soldier stood near an oil stove in the dark, his tattered uniform looking like a burlesque of war. Unexpectedly the dark ended, and a small doorway let me into the inner courtyard of the women's quarters. Two square stone basins of clear, clean water formed the centre of the patio, and stone paths ran round them. Stunted trees here and there pushing their squeezed trunks through the paving stones of the courtyard gave the impression of a shabby garden. The house stood at the far end, facing me as I entered, and the first impression which I received was of a torture chamber of solid butterflies, or a cluster of badly painted sweet peas—for so looked the women. You could not say they were not attractive, for they were; but it was like a scene in a play, all done a little wrong to our eyes. I have grown accustomed to these standards, and I can now also see them as they undoubtedly see themselves.

This sweet-pea effect arises from the head dress they wear, a piece of book-muslin, stiffened to a curve, around the face from brow, flowing free of the sides and behind. Their brilliantly colored dresses become softened under the white; the hair is cut short and much curled on the forehead with the stare of mourning, while the girls wear it uncut; both have a hundred little braids down their back. Let me here make the surprising statement that the Persian married women have always worn bangs; the innovation of the bang in the West came from the East—so does one live and learn! They clustered on the floor and on chairs, on a high terrace supported by stucco columns, and the house opened on to this terrace. About fourteen feet below the terrace, on the courtyard path, was a huge bonfire; here the same effect of clumsy flowers was repeated where the servants sat.

Between us and the house a raised wooden platform, covered with rugs, held a company of dancing girls and musicians—while on the roofs of the high mud-walls on either side a crowd of women, again like clusters of rather solid butterflies, or a cluster of badly painted sweet peas—for so looked the women. You could not say they were not attractive, for they were; but it was like a scene in a play, all done a little wrong to our eyes. I have grown accustomed to these standards, and I can now also see them as they undoubtedly see themselves.

I crossed the court, escorted with great ceremony by the oldest nurse, carrying the son, a little boy of four. Half-way I was met by the bride's mother, who, with a grave courtesy, led me up among the sweet-pea women and into the house. Here perhaps thirty little tables held the sweets sent for the wedding, the gift of the bridegroom; they stood in the room all around the room and in a little room apart, which windows from the big room looked into, sat the bride's old grandmother. She had a raised, low table, covered with a seed-pearl embroidered cloth, set in front of her, and she sat enthroned like a gargantuan old owl, leaning against gold-encrusted cushions, and wrapped in priceless cashmere shawls. Her head crossed her eyes owlishly, she loathed the whole body toward me with a smile, but she did not rise. We only looked at her. "She is the oldest woman here, and the most honorable," was whispered to me, "so she sits apart."

When the room was quite filled, and the four walls lined with the sun-like figures, the oldest woman was brought in. She was dressed in the dress of the past, a sort of cashmere flowing robe with a shawl folded around her waist and crossed in front. An enormous emerald, hung by a string of pearls, pierced pearls, held her coil of black hair under the chin; her bright eyes shone and twinkled, her cheeks were rose with paint, her thick hair was dyed black as night and curled on the forehead. "She is a very, very old woman," was whispered in my ear, and to myself I said: "And a very worldly old woman still; one who has eaten the good things of life, and thoroughly enjoyed them." She was one of the eighty legitimate wives of Nasreddin Shah (I am not indiscreet; among eighty I may surely describe one as more brow, flowing free of the sides and behind. Their brilliantly colored dresses become softened under the white; the hair is cut short and much curled on the forehead with the stare of mourning, while the girls wear it uncut; both have a hundred little braids down their back. Let me here make the surprising statement that the Persian married women have always worn bangs; the innovation of the bang in the West came from the East—so does one live and learn! She was one of the eighty legitimate wives of Nasreddin Shah (I am not indiscreet; she says went round. "Now she is here, the bride may come." I asked who the ancient lady was, and was answered in a very great whisper: "She is the bride's mother."

A stillness fell on all, and from a doorway down the courtyard the bride came slowly. The dancing girls stepped backward in front of her, and her family and friends scattered sweets to the crowd. Such a quiet, well-behaved crowd; they did not fight or scramble, but bent quietly and took what sweets they could reach, while the three-year-old woman who had remained sitting on the terrace beside me, she was a pretty, sweet-faced little girl of sixteen whom I had seen her last. At one time, I could not control the tears which went through me at the change they had made in her. Her head was held high, and draped with green and white shawls, her eyes were cast down, her five colored scarves and white, whose a pair of heels eyebrowned, in a point over her nose an inch between her eyes, and a little mole a black moustache. Is this not gruesome? The sign of a man? I shuddered at the thought. I was considered beautiful, understood, to touch my mind.

I had not long to wait for speechless, in the great gold chair then she raised her eyes and looked at me. Lady's face, they looked into each other's eyes for quite three or four minutes. It was a wonderful look. Then the girl dropped her eyes, and the expression changed, softened as she leaned toward her and continued gazing. For half an hour we sat in silence like this; then the old woman removed her eyes, and turned to the crowd of women watching her and uttered a little formula, asking. She is a lady of rank, then, I can find. I am a plausible for the Persian. They reward china a little for and I poured compliments into the old woman received my eyes, and then her eyes rest down. The old lady continued to gaze at me, as if she would go, but they gave her their best gift and said. I hope you will have many children to bless you."

"There stood an enormous mirror at one end of the room and then the bride moved forward with dignity, and the bridegroom who stood behind would look over her shoulder on arriving. And now he would see each other for the first time.

Shortly after the fifth cup of tea, an ordinary cup with the spoon in it, the signal for departure. The mothers parted with tears and the words "Khoda-hafiz—you will come again, but you will find her here."

NO. 8713.

This [illegible] little overdress here illustrated can be most attractively reproduced in white or colored pique, which is as suitable for wear in Winter as well as Summer.

The surplice front and short sleeves, finished in buttonholed scallops, render the mode very dressy, but any other mode of decoration may be adopted, such as insertion or edging. The blouse waist is in kimono style, the front and back being cut in one piece.

A belt of the material encircles the waist, or one of leather may be used. For a girl of 8 years, 2¾ yards of 36 inch material will be required for the making. Sizes 6, 8, 10 and 12 years.

NO. 8718.

THE two practical little garments comprising this set will prove invaluable during the Summer season, when so much of the children's playtime is spent out of doors.

They can be worn by either boy or girl, and their suitability and comfort will be appreciated by all mothers. Denim, gingham and holland are all suggested for the making.

The medium size will require 2½ yards of 36-inch material for the apron and 1¼ yards for the bloomers.

To obtain either of these two desirable patterns, fill in the accompanying coupon and mail, with 10 cents for each in stamps or silver, to Little Brother's Interrupted Lesson in Arithmetic, Which Foxy Grandpa Makes More Interesting.

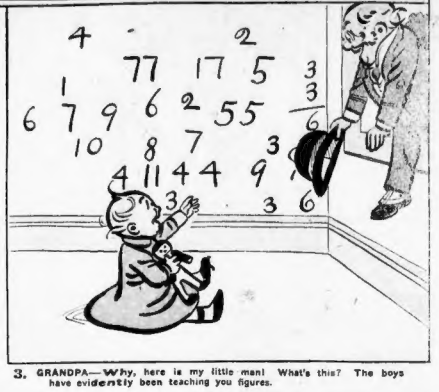
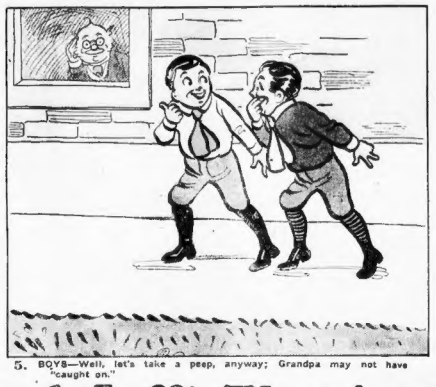
1. BOYS—Listen! Here comes Grandpa. We had better stop our figuring for the present and skip.

2. BOYS—It's lucky we got away quick, Grandpa might have scolded us for marking the wall.



3. GRANDPA—Why, here is my little man! What's this? The boys have evidently been teaching you figures.

4. GRANDPA—I will just add a bit here and try and make those figures more interesting to you, baby.



5. BOYS—Well, let's take a peep, anyway; Grandpa may not have "caught on."

6. GRANDPA—Hello, boys! Come in and take a look at our Noah's Ark.

Mutt and Jeff! They're Friends.

THAT OLD CRANK SPROGGINS WHO LIVES IN THERE, HAS OODLES OF MONEY AND I THINK HE'S RELATED TO ME ON MY GRANDMOTHER'S SIDE. ONLY HE NEVER ANSWERS THE DOOR-BELL, BUT I GOTTA SEE HIM.
I KNEW A FELLOW NAMED SPROGGINS ONCE.
GIVE ME A BOOST OVER THE WALL, I'LL TELL HIM A STORY THAT WILL TOUCH HIS HEART
GONNA WHACK UP WITH ME?
WHACK UP WITH YOU? WHY ARE YOU ALWAYS THINKING ABOUT YOURSELF?
JEFF
